

ADHYATMA RAMAYANA

INTRODUCTION

THE personalities of Rama and Sita have become so deeply embedded in the minds of the Indian people that their story has found expression in the form of several Ramayanas. Some of these are: Valmiki's Ramayana, Adhyatma Ramayana, Vasishtha Ramayana, Ananda Ramayana and Agastya Ramayana in Sanskrit and Kamba Ramayana in Tamil, Tulsidas Ramayana in Hindi, Kirtivasa Ramayana in Bengali and Ezuthachan's Adhyatma Ramayana in Malayalam. For all these works on the Rama Saga, Valmiki's famous epic on that theme is the basis. But according to the fundamental objects, which the poet-devotees who composed the other Ramayanas had in mind, they have introduced many changes from Valmiki's composition. But all of them directly or indirectly pay obeisance to Valmiki's grand epic, which is called the Adhikavya (the primeval poem) in Sanskrit, and its author the Adikavi (the first of poets).

In an Introduction to the Adhyatma Ramayana, we have necessarily got to make a study in brief of the main difference between this text and Valmiki's epic. Valmiki's object seems to have been to describe an ideal human character, namely that of Rama, though he accepts Rama also as an Incarnation of Mahavishnu. But the divinity of Rama is kept in the background, although all through the narrative there is an attempt made to refer to that also symbolically as explicated by many interpreters of Valmiki Ramayana. The direct object of Valmiki's epic is made plain at the very beginning of that text in verses 1 to 18 of Chapter I of the Bala Kanda. It reads as follows: (1) "Once in all humility the austere sage Valmiki asked sage Narada, who was ever engaged in Tapas and Vedic study and who was the most noted among the knowers of the Vedas, the following question: (2) 'Who in the world today is a great personage endowed with all virtues, who is courageous, who knows the secret of Dharma, who is grateful, who is ever truthful and who is established in sacred observances; (3) Who has great family traditions, who has got sympathy for all creatures, who is most learned, who is skilful and whose outlook is ever kindly; (4) Who is courageous, who has subdued anger, who is endowed with splendour, who is free from jealousy, who when angry in the field of battle is a terror even to the Devas. (5) I am interested to know about this. My desire to know is intense. O sage! You have the capacity to know the real worth of a man.'

(6) "Being greatly pleased at these words of Valmiki, Narada the sage with the knowledge of the past, present and future, said, 'Listen', and began to give his reply as follows: (7) 'O great sage! The virtues that you have pointed out are many and very rare to be found in people. So I shall be giving you my reply after due deliberation. You now hear from me who that person is who is endowed with the qualifications mentioned by you. In the line of Ikshvakus, there was a prince named Rama who was very famous among men. He was possessed of self-control; he was powerful; he was endowed with splendour; he was firm in his resolve; he had the capacity to bring all under himself and govern. (9) He was highly intelligent and just; he was an accomplished speaker and possessor of all wealth. He was the dread of his enemies; he had sumptuous shoulders, long arms, conch-like neck and fleshy cheeks. (10) His chest was broad and collar bones invisible. He was the most noted of archers and a queller of all his foes. With arms extending upto the knees, his head and gaze were extremely charming. (11) His height and attractive limbs were all proportionate to one another. All the limbs of his body were flawless; his complexion was shining; he was regal in his appearance, broad-chested and broad-eyed; he was endowed with beauty and all auspicious traits. (12) Established in Dharma and ever true to his words, he had the good of all creatures in mind. Far-famed, learned and pure, he was ever vigilant. He protected those who sought shelter under him—nay, he even subordinated his own interests to those of persons who thus sought refuge under him. Possessed of all auspicious traits, he was equal to Brahma himself. He ever protected his subjects and subdued his enemies. (13) A shelter to all living beings, he was the defender of Dharma and was ever devoted to his duties, always promoting the interests of his people. (14) He was interested in the truth of all the Vedas and their auxiliary subjects. He was not only versed in the science of arms, but had also the mastery of all the arts and sciences. His memory was most powerful and he had great powers of elucidating and explaining any subject. (15) Dear to all people, he was what a good man should be. He was given to both deep thought and to skilful action. As the ocean is ever accessible to all the rivers, so was he to all good men. (16) The worshipful personality that he was, he at the same time maintained a sense of equality with all, and was endowed with an outlook that cared for the interests of others. That dear son of Kausalya was endowed with every conceivable good quality. (17) In the gravity and depth of personality, he was like the ocean. In his capacity to bear heavy responsibilities, he was like the Himalayas. In valour and war-like qualities he was like Vishnu. In the mellowness of his personality he was like the moon. When his anger was roused, he was like the fire at the time of the world's dissolution. In patience, he was equal to the earth. In generosity he was a match to Kubera. In truthfulness, he was verily another Brahmadeva."

description of its hero is obviously to give us a picture of human perfection. This is not, however, to say that Valmiki does not recognise the divinity of Rama. When a personage is directly described as a Deity, he fails to be a model for human beings to imitate. Man's tendency with regard to such a personality is mainly to worship him. It was perhaps the recognition of this that made Valmiki propound the divinity of Rama only in subdued tones and paint him prominently as a great man. To make him human, the poet has even attributed to him some of the human weaknesses. But he takes care to see that Rama transcends them all, and teaches symbolically the great spiritual dictum of Saranagati, or resignation to the mercy of God. Vaishnava interpreters of the Ramayana have elaborately illustrated this teaching from various episodes in the life and doings of Rama. The most famous of those contexts is the episode in the Yuddha Kanda, where Vibheeshana takes shelter at the feet of Rama. Valmiki presents this teaching in his famous verse!

*sakṛudeva prapannāya tavāsmīti ca yācate |
Abhayam sarvabhūtebhyo dadāmyetat vratham
mama ||*

It means. "It is my vow to grant protection to all who take refuge in me saying, 'I am thine', even if it be by an enemy in battle." Thus while describing Rama as an ideal human personality, Valmiki has not, however, forgotten to remind his readers that Rama is a divine incarnation and all his doings are by way of illustration of the great teachings of Vedanta. Exponents of Valmiki-Ramayana have discussed this elaborately in their writings and thus shown that while it is a great piece of literature, it is as holy and profound as the Vedas and that its study with devotion leads to man's spiritual and material welfare.

Coming to the Adhyatma Ramayana, its very name suggests the trend of its contents. While Valmiki's great epic is mainly a Rama Saga in respect of its direct meaning, Adhyatma Ramayana is a direct elaboration of its spiritual implications. While in the former Rama is a great hero, no doubt an incarnation of Vishnu, in the latter he is a Deity—Mahavishnu, in a thinly assumed mask of a man, held before all for worship. This is made plain in the very first chapter of the text. The whole text is in the form of a report of a conversation between the Lord Mahadeva and the Goddess Parvati occurring as a part of the Brahmanda Purana, whereas Valimiki Ramayana is recited by Lava and Kusa as instructed by sage Valmiki. The Adhyatma begins this way: (6) Once seated in a pavilion in the heaven of Kailasa on a diamond throne, luminous like a hundred suns, the three-eyed Deity Siva—who is the Supreme Lord, the bestower of refuge, the adored of the Siddhas and the abode of Bliss—was addressed with devotion by Parvati Devi, his consort, and the daughter of the mountains, in the following sin-effacing words. Parvati said: (7)(10) O lotus-eyed one! I have yet another question to ask about a supremely esoteric matter. Please reply first to me about that. It is a well-known fact that devotion to Rama, the Essence of all existence, is a secure ship for man to cross the ocean of Samsara. It is a well-known teaching that devotion to the Supreme Being is a royal road to liberation and that no means other than that is so secure for its attainment. Yet I have some doubts in respect of this.....(12) Rama is said to be the Original Being transcending all the manifestations of the Gunas of Prakriti and unaffected by them. Accepting Him to be such, men devote themselves day and night without any laxity to his adoration and thereby they attain to the Supreme State. (13) Some people, however, say that in spite of being the Supreme One, Rama could not know himself to be the Supreme Self (Brahman) owing to the sway of the power of his own ignorance. When instructed by another (that is, by Brahma, as stated in Valmiki's Ramayana), he came to know the truth about the Transcendent Self. (14) If he had known the truth about himself earlier, how could he, the Supreme Being, be stricken with grief by the loss of Sita and bemoan his fate? If he was thus without the knowledge of the Self, how can he be a fit object of adoration, being on a par with all ignorant creatures? (15) Whatever explanation you may have got for this difficulty, deign to inform me of it and remove my doubt."

Mahadeva said: (16) "Never before have I been questioned by anyone on the truth concerning Rama, which is an esoteric doctrine, extremely profound and subtle. (17) I, who have been devotedly questioned and thus propitiated by you today, shall reply to your question after making due salutations to that noblest one of Raghu's line. Rama is the Supreme Self distinct from Prakriti. He is the one All-comprehending Being who is pure Bliss itself and the Spirit, supreme over all entities. Having projected all this universe by His power Maya-sakti, He dwells within and without the universe like the element sky. Though He is thus the resident within all beings, He is completely hidden from their vision, as He is their innermost self. He is the ultimate Seer and Witness of all this universe of His Maya's creation. (19) Before Him, the whole universe whirls as iron filings round a magnet. The unintelligent, with their minds covered by the power of ignorance (Avidya), know this not. On Him, Rama the Supreme Self, who is of the nature of Pure Consciousness, unaffected by Maya, ignorant Jivas superimpose their own ignorance and see Him as involved in worldly entanglements like themselves. Attached as they are to their own relatives and worldly assets, and involved in multifarious activities, they fail to perceive Rama dwelling within their hearts, just as they fail to recognise the presence of the golden necklaces adorning their necks. (21) In the sun, whose nature is luminosity, there can be no darkness. Even so, how can ignorance subsist in Rama, who is the condensation of Pure Consciousness and who is the transcendent and Supreme Self? A man of defective eye sight, whose vision is whirling, sees houses and other objects too as whirling. (The whirling movements of objects outside is only an attribution of his own whirling vision on them. So also men are deluded by superimposing on the Supreme Self egoistic actions of their own I-sense (Ahamkara), which in combination with the body and the senses assumes the role of the doer.) (23) In the sun, who is of the nature of unobstructible and changeless luminosity, there can be no day and night at any time. In the same way, in Rama, who is the Supreme Being Hari, who is the condensation of Pure Consciousness—how can there be knowledge and ignorance, the two changing states observed in limited centres of consciousness? (24) Rama, the noblest of the Raghus, is of the nature of Pure Bliss and Pure Consciousness that has no rise and fall. That lotus-eyed Lord is the witness of Ajnana (ignorance) and not a victim of it. Maya, the power of ignorance, is dependent on Him and therefore can never cause Him infatuation and ignorance."

A few verses after this we get a pointed statement of the above ideas in the following verse addressed by Sita to Hanuman. Sita says: (32) "Know Rama to be the Supreme Brahman, the Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute and the One without a second. He is Pure Existence devoid of all adjuncts, whom the senses cannot perceive as their object. (33) Know Rama as Pure Bliss, as devoid of all impurities, as peace, as changeless substance, as free from the stain of ignorance, as all-pervading Spirit, as devoid of all disvalues and as the revealing Consciousness. (34) Know me to be the primeval Prakriti, the material and instrumental cause of the creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe. In the mere presence of Rama, the Supreme Brahman, I, His Prakriti or Power, create the universe unwearied. (35) What I create in His mere presence, the ignorant superimpose on Him." She then explains what it is that is thus superimposed, and in doing so narrates in brief the incidents of Rama's life and concludes, saying: (44) "Rama walks not; He sits not; He sorrows not; He desires not, He abandons not; there is no trace of any activity in Him. Being pure

Bliss itself, there is no movement, no transformation in Him. As He is the substratum of Maya, the changeful Nature of His, He underlies all these transformations of the constituents of Maya, and for those who cannot distinguish the substratum from the constituents of Maya, He seems to get transformed, whereas it is only the constituents of Maya that undergo transformation."

Now this elaborate quotation makes plain that the object of Adhyatma Ramayana or the 'spiritual version of the Rama Saga' is to project Rama directly as the Supreme Self. But while doing so, the text takes care to see that He, who is the non-dual and uninvolved Self, is also the Personal Deity, the Supreme Isvara, who is to be adored and prayed to by all those who seek the knowledge of Non-duality described above. Bhakti of the most intense type is therefore taught, and it is also stressed that through devotion to Rama alone the saving knowledge would dawn in the Jiva. It pointedly says in verses 45 to 57 of the first chapter of Balakanda, well known as Sri-Rāmār̥daya, "A devotee of Mine who understands the Supreme Truth is fit for My Status. On the other hand, one who ignorantly engrosses himself in the search for this knowledge in the pit of scriptural texts without any devotion to Me, never attains this knowledge of My nature. They will not have liberation too even in a hundred life spans." And further it is said, "This knowledge, which is superior even to the attainment of the heaven of Indra, should not be imparted by you to any conceited man who has no devotion to Me." (Ch. v. 53). Thus the teaching of the Adhyatma-Ramayana is only an elaboration of the declaration of the Svetasvatara Upanishad, "It is only in one who has supreme devotion to God and to his spiritual teacher that this Truth (knowledge of the non-dual Self), when taught, will shine." Sri Ramakrishna also emphasises this aspect of spiritual life in a beautiful parable. "Suppose a noble man has a big garden which he places under the care of a gardener. The gardener works hard and produces excellent fruits and vegetables all the year round. The master at last, in course of time, gets so highly pleased with him that he keeps him on his own seat and tells him that he is his own self. In place of seeking that place by the master's side by pleasing him through devotion, if he were to sit on that seat out of pride and greed, he will only be pushed away from it. Thus through devotion alone this Supreme knowledge is obtained." The Gita also declares: "Being gracious to those who are thus firmly devoted to Me, I destroy the darkness of ignorance in them, lighting the lamp of wisdom in them by My presence as their very self." (X-11).

Thus to establish Rama's divine status as an object of worship and devotion and to teach that Bhakti and Jnana are not only reconcilable but always go together—is the prime object of this great text. In order to achieve this objective, the Adhyatma Ramayana, while sticking to the main trends and incidents of the Rama Saga described in Valmiki's epic, makes various deviations here and there in the course of its extensive narration. To cite a few such examples: In the Adhyatma Ramayana, Rama at his very birth, reveals himself as the four-handed Mahavishnu. Rama's departure to the forest is only of his own making, and the intrigues of Kaikeyi and Manthara are only external pretexts brought about by his Maya.. The Sita who is abducted by Ravana is not the real Sita but an illusory double of hers. The real Sita is hidden by the Fire-deity. And finally at the end of the Yuddha Kanda Sita's entry into fire is only a ruse to take back the real Sita from the hands of the Fire-deity. Ravana, Kumbhakarna etc., know the spiritual identity of Rama, and are only seeking death at his hand, as a means for salvation. They know that 'devotion through confrontation' is a quicker path than that of Bhakti of the ordinary type. These are only a few striking deviations: there are many more of this type scattered all through the text. All these deviations are meant for preserving the Supreme status of Rama in the eyes of the devotees. More of such deviations are listed in the Appendix.

Another feature which distinguishes the Adhyatama-Ramayana is the large number of hymns sung by the various personages entering into the narrative as also the many philosophical discourses that are spread in various parts of the text. Besides teaching fervent devotion, these give a very simple and non-technical but profound exposition of the doctrine of non-dualism. This is a deviations from Valmiki's epic which contains no such hymns and discourses.

On the whole the general scheme of the text seems to follow the pattern set by the Bhagavata Purana in dealing with the life of Sri Krishna in its 10th Skandha. The aim of the Bhagavata Purana is declared in its dictum—Kṛṣṇastu bhagavān svayam—Krishna is really the Bhagavan Himself. The Adhyatma Ramayana seeks to provide the followers of the Rama cult with such an incarnation that is not merely a manifestation but is identical with the Deity Himself. This is achieved by Rama revealing himself as the four-handed Mahavishnu at his very birth, a feature that is not seen in Valmiki. It is for the achievement of this that many of the deviations from Valmiki are made. In most of the deviations, either whatever human imperfections there might be in Rama are explained away or are made to be adopted with his previous knowledge in order to hide his divinity from unregenerate men. For example, the events leading to Rama's exile were super-humanly stage-managed by him, and Kaikeyi and Manthara were merely instruments he used to give the events the form of a court intrigue. The Sita who was abducted by Ravana was only a double and not the real Sita. Rama's weeping for Sita is expressly declared to be a mere assumption to look human in the eyes of men. The same object of deification of Rama is achieved by the numerous hymns addressed to him by the sages like Vasishtha, Parasurama, Bharadwaja, Agastya, Atri, Swayamprabha and others. The example of the Bhagavata Purana is very closely followed in respect of these hymns. They are couched in highly devotional language and all the attributes of the Supreme Deity are used for addressing Rama. Many of them are Advaitic in their philosophic content while their tone is intensely devotional. They again and again establish the doctrine that non-duality is the Supreme Truth but the way to its realisation is through devotion and divine grace. Without these, mere intellectualism will never bring spiritual illumination. Thus this great text seeks to reconcile Jnana and Bhakti as the obverse and reverse of an identical spiritual discipline, and being a text of the Rama cult, Rama is held forth as the Deity to be adored by those who seek salvation.

The Adhyatma Ramayana must have powerfully influenced the Ramayanas that came afterwards in regional languages. Though they all took Valmiki's great epic as the main source, the spiritual turn given to it by Adhyatma-Ramayana is reflected very strongly in the Ramayana of Tulsidas. While it is very doubtful whether it influenced Kamban's well-known Ramayana in Tamil, Ezuthachan's Ramayana, considered one of the greatest literary works in Malayalam, is a close translation of it, with its poetical and devotional excellence enhanced by that great literary man and Bhakta, giving to it the freshness of an original, inspired work.

A word in conclusion about the literary side of the text will not be out of place. Its poetry does not come anywhere near the epic grandeur of Valmiki but yet it is a text with considerable literary beauty and is couched in easy yet lucid Sanskrit with a highly devotional tone. Its authorship and date are unknown. It is purposeless to enter into the pure guess-work that modern scholars indulge in regarding these matters. However relevant it may be for scholarly purposes, it is of no use for those who approach the text from the devotional point of view,—just as counting the number of leaves on a mango tree is for one going to an orchard for eating mangoes. Valmiki's Ramayana was composed by that sage himself on the advice of Brahma. Thus advised, the sage through meditation recovered the whole history of Rama, composed a great epic on it in the Sloka form that he himself had devised, taught Lava and Kusa to recite it in a musical manner, and thus publicised it in the world. The traditional origin of Adhyatma Ramayana is quite different from this. It is a part of the Brahmanda Purana beginning from the 61st Adhyaya (chapter) of the first part of that text. Of all the Puranas, Veda Vyasa is the traditional author, and we can therefore attribute the Adhyatma Ramayana to him. There are, however, some modern scholars who guess saint Ramananda of the 14th century to be its author. Excluding the Uttara Kanda, it consists of six Kandas with 56 Sargas (chapters) comprising about 3643 verses. We have translated only these six Kandas, excluding the seventh chapter called Uttara Kanda, as it seems to be extraneous to Ramayana proper. The text is in the form of a conversation between Siva and Parvati, which is reported by Brahma to Narada. Though thus the traditional origins of these two Ramayanas are different, and though there are differences in the treatment of the subject, it should not be supposed that there is any contradiction between these. Both of them deal with the same history of Rama, and what Adhyatma Ramayana has done is only to make explicit what Valmiki has taught implicitly and indirectly in his great epic. As a much smaller text than that of Valmiki and complete in itself, it offers the devotees of Rama a smaller and directly devotional exposition of Rama's greatness which they can use in their daily practice of devotion. In conclusion it may be pointed out that Bhagavan Sri Ramakrishna refers often to Adhyatma Ramayana in his talks, thus drawing people's attention to the devotional importance of this text.

THE TRUTH ABOUT RAMA

Salutations to Rama (1-5)

1. He—the Light of Consciousness, the Undecaying One—who, being beseeched by the Devas, was born on earth in an assumed human form as a scion of the Solar Dynasty; who, after having effaced the tribe of the Rakshasas and established His eternal and sin-destroying holy fame all the world over, assumed again His own original form as Primeval Brahman—Him, the Lord of Janaka's daughter, I adore. 2. He who is the sole cause of the origin, the sustentation and dissolution of the world-systems; who is the support of the manifesting power known as Maya but is at the same time free from all its effects; whose form transcends all mental conceptions; who is a condensation of Bliss and Pure Consciousness—Him, the Lord of Sita and the knower of Truth, I adore. 3. Those who study or hear with whole-hearted attention this Text called the Adhyatma-Ramayana, which has the approval of all the Puranas, are freed from all sins, and they attain to Sri Hari. 4. One who aspires for Mukti should verily study the Adhyatma-Ramayana. He

Question of Parvati: Was Rama engrossed in worldliness? (6-15)

6. Once seated in a pavilion in the heaven of Kailasa, on a diamond throne luminous like a hundred suns, the three-eyed Deity Siva—who is the Supreme Lord, the bestower of refuge, the adored of the Siddhas, and the Abode of Bliss—was addressed with devotion by Parvati Devi his Consort, the Daughter of the Mountain, in the following sin-effacing words:

Parvati said: 7. Salutations to Thee, the Shining One and the Abode of the world systems! Thou art the Ultimate Seer to whom all Jivas are objects! Thou art also the Supreme Lord over all beings. May Thou, who art the Eternal One too, be pleased to impart to me the truth about Purushottama, the supreme spiritual Substance. 8. Lo! Great ones impart to devotees even important spiritual secrets which should not in the ordinary course be communicated to others. I am Thy devotee and Thou art my dear one. So, O Lord, be pleased to answer my question. 9. Impart in brief and simple words, which could be grasped even by me, an ignorant woman, that knowledge which produces spiritual experience, followed by supreme devotion and non-attachment to worldly values.

10. O Lotus-Eyed One! I have yet another question to ask about a supremely esoteric matter. Please tell (reply) me first about that. It is a well-known fact that devotion to Rama, the Essence of all existence, is a well-built ship for man to cross the ocean of Samsara. 11. It is a well-known teaching that devotion (Bhakti) to the Supreme Being is the royal road to liberation (Moksha), and that no means other than that is required for its attainment. Yet I have some doubts in respect of this. It behoves Thee to dispel such doubts from my mind by Thy clear exposition. 12. Rama is said to be the Original Being transcending all the manifestations of the Gunas of Prakriti and is unaffected by them. Accepting him to be so, men devote themselves day and night without any reservation to his adoration and thereby they attain to the Supreme State. 13. Some people, however, say that in spite of being the Supreme One, Rama could not know himself as the Spiritual Self (Brahman) owing to his own Power of Ignorance. When instructed by another (i.e. by Brahma as stated in Valmiki's Ramayana), he came to know the truth about the Transcendent Self. 14. If he had known the truth about himself earlier, how could he, the Supreme Being, be stricken with grief by the loss of Sita and bemoan his fate? But if he was without knowledge of the Self, how can he be a fit object for adoration, being only on a par with all the ignorant living creatures? 15. Whatever explanation you have for this conundrum, deign to inform me of it and remove my doubt.

Mahadeva On the Truth about Rama (16-24)

16. Sri Mahadeva said: You are indeed fortunate in having got this desire to know the truth concerning the Supreme Self. You are a devotee. Never before this have I been questioned by any one on the truth concerning Rama, which is an esoteric doctrine, extremely profound and subtle.

17. I, who have been devotedly questioned and thus prompted by you today, shall reply to your question after making due salutations to that noblest one of Raghu's line. Rama is the Supreme Self, distinct from Prakriti. He is the one all-comprehending Being, who is pure Bliss itself and the Spirit Supreme over all entities. 18. Having projected this entire universe by His Power, Maya-sakti, He dwells within and without the universe like the element ether. Though He is thus the resident within all beings, He is completely hidden from their vision, as He is their innermost Self. He is the ultimate Seer and Witness of all this universe of His Maya's creation. 19. Before Him the whole universe whirls as iron filings round a magnet. The unintelligent, with their minds covered by the power of Ignorance (Avidya), know this not. 20. On Him, Rama—the Supreme Self, the

Pure Consciousness unaffected by Maya—ignorant Jivas superimpose their own ignorance and see Him as involved in worldly entanglements like themselves. Attached as they are to their own relatives and worldly assets, and involved in multifarious activities, they fail to perceive Rama dwelling within their hearts, just as they fail to recognise the presence of their golden necklaces adorning their own necks. 21. In the sun whose nature is luminosity, there can be no darkness. Even so how can ignorance subsist in Rama who is the condensation of Pure Consciousness, and who is the transcendent and Supreme Self? 22. A man of defective eye-sight, whose vision is whirling, sees the houses and other objects too as whirling. (The whirling movements of the objects outside is only an attribution on them of one's own whirling vision). So also men are deluded by superimposing on the Supreme Self egoistic actions of their own I-sense (Ahankara) which in combination with the body and the senses, assumes the role of the doer. 23. In the sun who is of the nature of unobstructible and changeless luminosity, there can be no day and night at any time. In the same way, in Rama, the Supreme Being Hari, who is the condensation of Pure Consciousness, how can there be knowledge and ignorance, the two changing states observed in limited centres of consciousness? 24. Rama, the noblest of the Raghus, is of the nature of Pure Bliss-Consciousness that has no rise and fall. That lotus-eyed Lord is the witness of Ajnana (ignorance) and not a victim of it. Maya, the power of ignorance, is dependent on Him, and can therefore never cause Him infatuation and ignorance.

Sita instructs Hanuman (25-31)

25. In further elaboration of this I shall narrate to you a conversation that took place between Sita, Rama and Hanuman. It is concerned with the means for the attainment of Moksha—a closely guarded, inaccessible secret. (26-27). In days of old when the events related in the Ramayana took place, Rama the heroic warrior, after destroying Ravana, the enemy of the Devas, along with all his sons, army and vehicles, returned to Ayodhya with Sita, accompanied by Lakshmana and Sugriva, and attended by the monkey leaders headed by Hanuman. 28. Anointed king, Rama, who was luminous like numerous suns, sat on the royal throne surrounded by great men like the sage Vasishtha. (29-30), There Rama saw Hanuman, who had fulfilled all his duties, who was desireless, who was an aspirant for Knowledge, and who was high-minded, standing before him with hands held in salutation. Seeing him so standing, Rama said to Sita, "Impart to Hanuman the Knowledge of the Supreme Truth. He is without any impurity, and he is ever devoted to us. He is a fit recipient for spiritual illumination.” 31. Sita, who is the Lord’s Power infatuating the whole world with confusion about the true spiritual Self, agreed to do so, and imparted to Hanuman, who was a true spiritual refugee at the Lord’s feet, the Truth about Rama in a convincing way.

Sita on the real nature of Rama (32-43)

Sita said: 32. Know Rama to be the Supreme Brahman—the Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute, the One without a second. He is Pure Existence devoid of all adjuncts, whom the senses cannot perceive as their object. 33. Know Rama as pure Bliss, as devoid of all impurity, as peace, as changeless Substance, as free from the stain of ignorance, as all-pervading Spirit, as devoid of all disvalues, and as self-revealing Consciousness. 34. Know me to be the Primeval Prakriti, the material and instrumental cause of the creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe. In the mere presence of Rama the Supreme Brahman, I, His Prakriti (Power), create the universe unwearyed.

35. What I create in His mere presence, the ignorant super-impose on Him. (Now hear about what is thus super-imposed). He was born in the city of Ayodhya in the very pure line of the Raghus. 36. He helped Visvamitra to conduct the sacrificial rites safe from the obstruction of Rakshasas. He then terminated the effects of the curse that was on Ahalya. Next he broke asunder the great bow of Mahesvara at the court of Janaka, my father. 37. Thereupon he solemnised his marriage with me, humbled the pride of Bhargava Rama on his way to Ayodhya after the marriage, and lived with me in Ayodhya for twelve years. 38. Then took place his exile to Dandakaranya, followed by the destruction of Viradha, the slaughter of the demon Maricha who came to deceive us in the form of a deer, and the abduction of Maya-Sita by Ravana. 39. Next he gave salvation to Jatayu and Kabandha, accepted the worshipful adoration of the ascetic woman Sabari, and entered into a treaty with Sugreeva. 40. Afterwards took place the destruction of Vali, the search for Sita, the spanning of the ocean with a bridge of rocks, and the siege of Lanka. (41-42). Next took place the destruction of the evil-minded Ravana with all his progeny, the gift of the Kingdom of Lanka to Vibhishana, the departure with me to Ayodhya in the aerial vehicle called Pushpaka, and finally the crowning of Rama as the King of Ayodhya. All these achievements, though accomplished by me (Prakriti), are superimposed on Rama, who is really changeless in Himself and is the soul of all beings. 43. Rama walks not, He sits not; He sorrows not; He desires not; He abandons not; there is no trace of any activity in Him. Being Pure Bliss itself, there is no movement, no transformation in Him. As He is the substratum of Maya, the changeful Nature of His, He underlies all these transformations of the constituents of Maya, as their substratum; and for those who cannot distinguish the substratum from the changeful

Srirama-hridayam (44-56)

Sri Mahadeva said: 44. Next Rama himself said to Hanuman who was standing near: I shall tell you the truth about Atma, Anatma (non-Atma) and Paramatma (transcendent Atma). 45. The Akasa (sky) has three divisions. There is first of all the all-pervading sky. Then there is the Akasa or sky in association with (or pervading) the water receptacles like tanks, lakes, water pools etc. This sky cannot at all be called different from the universal sky in spite of its association with water receptacles. Apart from these, there is a third sky, namely, the reflection of the universal sky seen in the water of the vessel. 46. In the same way Consciousness has three aspects First of all there is the all-pervading Pure Consciousness. Next there is the Consciousness that is associated with the Buddhi (intellect). Thirdly there is the Consciousness reflected in the Buddhi. 47. Ignorant people with distorted understanding superimpose on the partless and unchanging Witness Consciousness the sense of agency of the Consciousness reflected in the Buddhi, whose movements and distortions are all assumed by the reflected Consciousness as its own. Along with that, the state of the Jiva is also assumed. (For, in order that the Pure Consciousness may be made into Witness Consciousness, there must be something outside to be witnessed, and this is provided by the emergence of the Jiva or Reflection of Consciousness in Buddhi simultaneously with the assumption of witnesshood in Pure Consciousness.) 48. The Reflection (Jiva) is a false assumption: so also the Buddhi is a product of ignorance. Thus both the Jiva and the Buddhi are false. Brahman on the other hand is indivisible and therefore partless; divisibility in Him is due to adjuncts (which are unreal). 49. The great Vedic doctrines like 'Thou Art That' assert the unity of this individual Reflection (Jiva), along with the Collective Reflection (avichchinnam), with the Full i.e.

Pure Consciousness devoid of the association of any adjuncts. 50. When by hearing and meditating on the great Vedic Dicta like 'Tattvamasi' the sense of the unity of the two Atmans (i.e. the Jivatman and the Paramatman) is recognised, then ignorance along with all its offshoots like the I-sense with regard to the body etc., will perish. There is no doubt about it.

51. A devotee of Mine, who understands this Supreme Truth, is fit for my Status. On the other hand one who ignorantly engrosses himself in the search for this Knowledge in the pit of scriptural Texts, without any devotion to Me, never attains to this Knowledge of My nature. He will not have liberation too, even in a hundred life-spans. 52. O Sinless One! This esoteric Truth about Me known as 'Sri Rama-hridaya' has been declared by Myself (the Divine Incarnate) to you. This Knowledge, which is superior even to the attainment of the heaven of Indra, should not be imparted by you to any conceited man who has no devotion to Me.

Sri Mahadeva said: 53. O Devi! I have communicated to you this Knowledge known as Sri Rama-hridayam which I once imparted to Hanuman. It is a highly guarded secret, a panacea for all sins, holy and heart-delighting.

54. He who constantly studies with devotion this exposition given by Rama, the Lord Incarnate Himself, will surely attain to Moksha (liberation). 55. The effect of heinous sins like Brahmahatya (murder of a holy man) committed in numerous lives past, will all be dissipated by the devout study of this—such is the unequivocal declaration of Rama Himself. 56. A man may be an outcaste, a confirmed sinner—one ever given to the appropriation of other people's wealth and women, a thief, a murderer of holy men and one's parents, a persecutor of ascetics—if even he worships Sri Rama and studies this Sri Rama-hridayam with true devotion, he attains in this very life to a status which is difficult of achievement even for great Yogis.

bondage. 3. Having heard from Thee the life-story of Sri Rama in brief along with the metaphysical truth about him, there has arisen in my mind a desire to hear it in all detail and in a manner easy enough for me to grasp.

Sri Mahadeva said: 4. O Devi! Listen to the story of Rama, the resident of the innermost soul of all—a supreme secret that I had heard in days of old from Rama himself. 5. I shall narrate it to you now. Listen to this narrative which removes the threefold misery of man, which eradicates the great fear of death generated by ignorance, and which bestows prosperity, longevity and male progeny.

6. The Earth-deity, finding that the earth was about to sink due to the load of evil represented by the host of Rakshasas headed by Ravana, assumed the form of a cow, and along with all the great sages and celestials, resorted to the realm of Brahma, the Creator, and represented her tragic fate to him with tears in her eyes. Being the soul of all, Brahma, by a moment's reflection, grasped the situation mentally (without the help of any long narration). 7. Next Brahma, the four-faced Creator, proceeded to the Milk Ocean, accompanied by a large number of Devas and the Earth-deity. There, with voice trembling with the fervour of devotion and eyes brimming with tears of joy stimulated by the excess of Divine love, he began to invoke Hari, the omniscient, the unaging Resident of the hearts of all and the Lord of all, with a hymn couched in clear words of Vedic import and having the sanction of the ancient spiritual tradition.

8. Then did Hari manifest in the eastern quarter, luminous and brilliant like a thousand suns, dispelling the darkness everywhere. (9-13). After earnest supplications, Brahma now got the vision of Hari, which people without purity of mind can never have. The Lord, as He appeared in the Vision, was luminous like the Indranila gem (lapis lazuli); having a smiling face with a pair of lotus-like eyes; adorned with a crown, pearl necklaces and ear-pendants; shining with the lustre of Srivatsa mark, Kaustubha jewel etc.; hymned by sages like Sanaka and others; surrounded by His attendants; sporting the conch, discus, mace, and play-lotus in His hands; beautified by a garland of wild flowers; wearing a Yajnopavita of gold and a cloth of golden yellow; accompanied by His consorts Sri and Bhū; and seated on His mount Garuda. Seeing this glorious vision of the Lord Brahma began to praise Him in words couched in a voice that was choked with joyous emotion.

2. The Hymn of Brahma (14-21)

Brahma said: 14. O Lord! Adoration to Thy lotus feet with my entire being—the body, vital forces, intellect, senses and mind,—to Thy lotus feet which are meditated upon constantly by those who yearn for liberation from the bonds of Karma. 15. By virtue of Thy mysterious power Maya, constituted of the three Gunas, Thou createst, sustaineſt and destroyeſt the universe. But by these actions Thy nature as the Supreme Bliss-Consciousness is not in the least affected. 16. The sinful mind of men is never purified as efficiently by good deeds like charity and scriptural study, as happens in the case of those who practise constant devotion to Thy holy fame. 17. May Thy holy feet, a glimpse of which I have had in my heart all of a sudden, and which devoted sages choose to adore, eradicate all the evil traits of my mind. 18. Thy feet which persons like me, the Creator, worship at the outset for the achievement of our purposes —say, in my case, for gaining the power of creation,—, are contemplated in their hearts by knowing ones endowed with renunciation for gaining the direct experience of Thyself. 19. Sri Devi, Thy Consort and Goddess of Prosperity, though having her residence on Thy chest, is jealous, like a co-wife, of the holy Tulasi wreaths offered by devotees and occupying Thy feet. (For she fears that, being offered by Thy devotees, Thou art more fond of that humble Tulasi than of herself in spite of her being the Deity of all beauty, prosperity and all other glorious features.) 20. Therefore, Thy devotees of mature wisdom, knowing, as they thus do, that Thou art more fond of the genuine devotees than of Sri Devi, ever desire only for Bhakti, the highest form of devotion (in order that the Lord's choice may fall on them) 21. May I therefore be blessed with devotion to Thy lotus feet ever more. For to one stricken with the fever of transmigratory existence, nothing is as effective a medicament as Bhakti.

The Lord Condescends to Incarnate (22-32)

(22-25). To Brahma who was thus hymning, the Supreme Being Hari spoke, enquiring what He should do for him. Delighted at this response of the Lord, Brahma said: "O Supreme Lord! A powerful Rakshasa named Ravana, who is the son of Visravas of the house of Pulastya, getting proud and audacious on account of certain boons I had given him, has now become a menace to the world at large, and is subjecting the three worlds and the celestials protecting them to terrible oppression. O Auspicious One! I had decreed that his death could be accomplished by a human being only. So, O Lord, deign to take a human embodiment and destroy this enemy of the celestials."

The Supreme Lord said: 26. The Prajapati Kasyapa once propitiated Me by his austerities. As requested by him, I have agreed to be born as his son. That Kasyapa is now born on earth as King Dasaratha. 27. I shall take a human embodi-

When I incarnate, My Yoga-maya (Spiritual Power) will be born as Sita, the daughter of Janaka. In association with Her, I shall accomplish all your purposes. Saying so, the Lord Mahavishnu disappeared from the sight of all. Then Brahma said to the Devas as follows. 29. "Mahavishnu will incarnate Himself in a human form in the royal house of Raghu. 30. All of you take birth among the tribe of Vanaras (apes) by fractions of yourselves, and be the helpers of the Lord Vishnu as long as He is on earth for the accomplishment of His mission." 31. Addressing the Devas thus and comforting Mother-earth, Brahma returned with a peaceful heart to his spiritual abode known as Satyaloka. 32. And the Devas, expecting the advent of Hari and the chances of becoming His helpers in this divine mission, got embodied in different places in the form of apes capable of fighting with mountains and trees as their weapons.

THE INCARNATION OF RAMA

Dasaratha's sacrifice for the Sake of Issue was issueless, he one day addressed his family preceptor Vasishtha, after making obeisance to him in due form. 3. He said: "O Master! How can I have worthy sons with all auspicious features? My whole kingdom is only a cause of sorrow to me, as I have no issue to succeed me. 4. Thereupon the sage Vasishtha said to him: "You shall have four worthy sons who will be equal to the guardian deities of the quarters. 5. Without loss of time manage to get here the austere sage Rishyasringa, the husband of Senta, and perform Putra-kameshti, a sacrifice to be performed by one desiring issue, with him, Rishyasringa, as chief priest. He will be assisted by us, your family priests."

6. Complying with this instruction, King Dasaratha invited the sage Rishyasringa, and with due observance of preliminary sacrificial disciplines, commenced the performance of the sacrifice assisted by his ministers and sages like Vasishtha. 7. When holy offerings were made in the sacrificial fire, with great faith, the Fire-deity possessing the luminosity of gold purified by heating, emerged from the sacrificial pit, holding forth a golden vessel containing Payasa (milk pudding). 8. "Receive this divine Payasa made by the Devas, which is productive of issue. It will undoubtedly help you to obtain Mahavishnu Himself as son." 9. Saying so, that Fire-deity gave the Payasa to the king and disappeared from sight. And the king, having achieved his object, made obeisance to both the sages, Vasishtha and Rishyasringa.

Rama Incarnates (10-18)

10. Permitted by the sages Vasishtha and Rishyasringa, the king gave half the quantity of that Payasa to Queen Kausalya, and the other half to Kaikeyi. 11. Thereupon Sumitra, the third consort of the King, who too was extremely desirous of consuming that issue-conferring Payasa, came forward. Kausalya joyfully gave her one half from her own share. 12. Kaikeyi too gave her (Sumitra) one half of her share of the Payasa. All these women who consumed the Payasa became big with child.

13. In their quarters in the palace, these queens now shone like celestials, and in the tenth month Kausalya gave birth to a unique infant. 14-15. The Supreme Spirit, the Eternal Being and the Lord of all, incarnated in the month of Chaitra (Madhumasa) amidst a shower of flowers, on the ninth day of the bright fortnight, under the constellation of Punarvasu in the auspicious zodiacal sign of Cancer when the five planets (the Sun, Mars, Saturn, Jupiter and Venus) were in the ascendant, and the sun was at the sign of the Ram (Mesha). (16-18). Blue in complexion like the petals of a blue lily; draped with a yellow wearing cloth; sporting four arms; with the corner of the eyes tinged lotus-red; wearing a pair of shining ear-pendants; luminous like a hundred suns; crowned with a diadem over His head of curly locks; resplendent with conch, discus, mace and lotus in His four arms and a wreath of wild flowers on the chest; with His face illumined by the lunar light of his smile indicative of the presence of the moon of grace in His heart; possessing lotus-like eyes overflowing with the sentiment of universal love; and adorned with the Srivatsa, necklace, armlets, anklets and other ornaments—such was the form of the Lord when He incarnated Himself as the son of Kausalya.

Kausalya's Hymn and the Lord's Response (19-34)

19. Wonderstruck at the sight of the Divine form of the Lord, Kausalya addressed Him with her hands held in salutation and eyes brimming with tears of joy.

Kausalya said: 20. Salutations to Thee, the Lord over all divinities and the wearer of divine insignia like conch, discus and mace! Thou, O Lord, art the Supreme Spirit, the Highest of all beings, eternal, all-pervading and limitless. 21. The knowers of the Vedas declare Thee to be indescribable by words, and ungraspable by the conceptual process of the intellect. Transcending the purview of the senses, Thou art the Essence of all beings as pure Existence, and Thy form is of Pure Consciousness. 22. By Thy Power known as Maya Thou, in association with the Gunas of Rajas, Sattva and Tamas, createst, sustinest and destroyest the universe. But (unaffected by all this creative activity) Thou art ever the Pure Being, the Fourth transcending the three states of waking, dream and sleep. 23. Though Thou appearest to be doing, Thou art no doer; though Thou appearest to be moving, Thou art not moving; though Thou appearest to be hearing, Thou art not hearing; and though Thou appearest to be seeing, Thou art not seeing. 24. Without Prana, without mind, untainted—such is the declaration of the Vedas about Thee. Though Thou abidest in all beings alike as unmodified Being, Thou art outside the ken of all. 25. Though thus outside the range of persons whose mind is overcast with the darkness of ignorance, those endowed with a pure mind perceive Thee clearly. All the world systems included in the cosmos are but minute atoms in Thy abdomen. 26. Following the ways of the world, Thou art born of my womb. O Thou, the noblest one of Raghu's line! Today, by this condescension of Thine, I have come to understand how Thou dost subject Thyself to Thy devotees. 27. Today have I attained to Thy holy feet—I who am submerged in the ocean of Samsara, the transmigratory cycle, and who am by Thy illusory Power forced into an infatuating involvement with husband, children, wealth and other worldly concerns. 28. O Lord! May this form of Thine remain ever impressed in my mind, and let not Thy Maya, the Power that infatuates the whole world, affect and overpower me. 29. Soul of the universe! Deign to withdraw this suprahuman form of Thine, and reveal Thy charming form as an infant that confers bliss on all who see it. I shall overcome the formidable darkness of ignorance by lovingly embracing and talking with Thee as an infant.

30. The Lord said: "O mother! Let every thing take place as you wish. It will never be otherwise.

31. "I have been entreated in the past by Brahma to relieve the earth of its burdens by destroying Ravana. For this purpose I have now assumed a human form. 32. Besides, O virtuous lady, you and Dasaratha had in days of old performed austerities, praying that you should get Me as your son. 33. This form of Mine which you have seen is a vision vouchsafed to you as the fruit of the austerities you have performed before. It is impossible for any one to experience this form otherwise. For, My vision bestows liberation on those who get it. 34. Those who study this dialogue between us or even hear it read, will have remembrance of Me at the time of death and attain Sarupya, liberation consisting in the attainment of My form.

Rama's Infancy and Childhood (35-59)

35. Saying so to the mother, Rama adopted the form of an infant and cried like a newly born babe. Even in that infant's form, he was extremely handsome, blue in complexion like the Indra-neela gem, and having very broad eyes. 36. He shone like the early sun, and all the protecting divinities of the quarters rejoiced at his birth. On hearing the gladdening news of a son's birth, King Dasaratha came running in great delight to see the infant, accompanied by his family priest Vasishtha. 37. With eyes brimming with tears of joy at the sight of the infant Rama, having eyes resembling lotus petals, Dasaratha performed all the birth ceremonies for him as directed by his preceptor. 38. Afterwards handsome Kaikeyi gave birth to Bharata, and Sumitra to a set of twins with faces resembling the full moon.

39. Overflowing with delight, Dasaratha made gifts of numerous villages, auspicious cows and dresses, besides gold and precious gems, to holy men in honour of the birth of his sons. 40. The preceptor Vasishtha gave the name of Rama to Kausalya's infant, meaning the one in whom the sages, whose ignorance has been dispelled by Vidya, take delight (ramante). Because he delights (ramanat) all, he was called Rama—this also can be another meaning of the name.

41. The other infants were named as follows by the Guru: Kaikeyi's infant was named Bharata, because he would come to have great administrative skill (bharanat), and of Sumitra's two infants, one was named Lakshmana because he was endowed with all marks indicative of auspiciousness (laksanānvitam), and the other Satrughna, because he would be a destroyer of all enemies (satrughantaram).

42. In accordance with the parts of Pāyasa that Sumitra received from Kausalya and Kaikeyi, these infants moved about in pairs, Lakshmana with Rama, and Satrughna with Bharata. 43. Rama and Lakshmana, playing childish pranks, delighted their parents by their gestures and artless prattle. (44-46). Bedecked on the forehead with a golden Tilaka shaped like a banyan leaf studded in the centre with a pearl spreading its sheen all over the forehead; comely with necklaces of precious gems having a leopard claw in the centre; with cheeks illumined by the rays coming from ear ornaments made of gold and studded with precious gems; wearing anklets of gold giving out a jingling sound, besides a golden girdle and bracelets; and revealing the just sprouting teeth in his mouth—Rama of the blue lustre of an Indra-neela gem delighted his parents, as they witnessed him sporting with the calves in the inner quadrangle of the palace.

(47-48) Dasaratha, at the time of taking food, would call Rama with great affection and joy several times to eat with him. Being absorbed in play he would refuse to respond. So the King, with a smile on his face, would ask Kausalya to fetch him; but even after much chasing, she could never get hold of him who could be grasped only by the mind of the Yogi. 49. Afterwards with a smile on his lips, Rama would go to the father of his own accord, and receiving in his mud-smeared hand, a ball of rice, run away to play, once again.

(50-51) Every month His mother Kausalya used to observe vows and offer worship for counteracting all evil influences on the child, whom she would decorate well. She would also make elaborate preparations of various sweets and other dainties as offerings. (52-53) On account of the prankish movements of Rama, she would often be required to abandon her household duties. One day the boy went to his mother's side and said, "Oh mother! I am very hungry. Give me something to eat." But being absorbed in her work, she did not hear it. Extremely angry at this, Rama took a stick and with that broke all the vessels. 54. He broke the vessels in which milk and butter were hung in slings and distributed their contents between Lakshmana and Bharata. 55. Afterwards he gave that curd and milk to Satrughna also. When the cook reported this to the mother, she came running and laughing, to catch hold of Rama. (56-57). Seeing her approaching, all the brothers ran away, with Kausalya pursuing them in spite of her feet stumbling against obstructions. She at last caught hold of Rama, the Lord of the Raghus, and holding him in her hand, that noble lady could only keep on looking at his face without showing anything like anger or annoyance. But lo! Rama in his childish mood began to weep. (58-59) Embraced by the mother, all of them were fondled intensely by her. Thus did Rama, the embodiment of bliss and the source of joy for all the worlds, entertain Dasaratha and Kausalya with that assumed form of his as a child. In this way they passed from the stage of childhood to that of boyhood.

Training of the Brothers (60-66)

60. Now they were invested with the sacred thread by the family preceptor Vasishtha and were instructed and made proficient in arts and sciences, especially in archery and bowmanship. They were thus made competent in the knowledge of all the Sastras. 61. Though lords of the world, they, having assumed human forms in a sportive manner, had to undergo all the above training. Of the four brothers, Lakshmana was always in the habit of reverently following Rama. (62-63). In the attitude of a servant towards his master, Satrughna always followed Bharata. Daily, Rama, equipped with bow and arrows, would go to the forest on horseback along with Lakshmana to hunt wild animals, and he would bring all the game and present them before his father.

64. Getting up early in the morning and finishing his ablutions and daily rites, he would salute his father and mother in all humility, and then attend to all the affairs of State. 65. Every day he would take his food along with all his kith and kin. Then he would engage himself in hearing expositions of scriptural and administrative texts by learned men and offer his own explanations. 66. In this way, incarnated in a human body, the Supreme Being, who is immutable and free from all transformations, did everything following the habits and customs of men. But when the truth about him is investigated it would be seen he was always unaffected by any change.

RAMA'S ADOLESCENCE

Visvamitra's Arrival, Seeking Rama
(1-11)

Sri Mahadeva said: 1. Once sage Visvamitra, possessed of a radiance like that of the fire, having understood that the Supreme Being had incarnated Himself as

Rama by assuming His power of Maya, came to Ayodhya in order to see him. 2. Seeing that Visvamitra had arrived, King Dasaratha went in haste along with Vasishtha to receive him and make the customary offerings. 3. Bowing down to him in great devotion with his palms joined together in salutation, the Raja said to the sage very respectfully, "O, great sage! I have attained the object of my life by this visit of your holiness. 4. Wherever sages like you go, those houses attain to great prosperity. Whatever might be the object with which you have come, I offer in truth to fulfil the same."

(5-6). Greatly pleased with the king's hospitality, the high-souled Visvamitra said in reply, "Whenever on the fourteenth day of the fortnight I offer special worship to Devas and Pitrīs, two Rakshasas named Maricha and Subahu along with their followers obstruct my rites. 7. Therefore in order to destroy these Rakshasas, please send with me Rama, the eldest of the brothers, along with Lakshmana. This will bring great good to you. 8. If this proposal is agreeable to you, please take counsel with Vasishtha and then send them with me." Thinking deeply over the proposal, King Dasaratha approached his preceptor Vasishtha in solitude and asked him: (9-10). "O teacher! What am I to do now? My mind is very reluctant to send away Rama. It was after several thousand years of my life that I got these four sons. They are equal to celestials. Among them Rama is the dearest to me. If Rama goes away from here, it is impossible for me to sustain my life any longer. 11. But if I refuse to send him at Visvamitra's request, that sage is sure to curse me. What course shall I take in this situation, consistent with my good? It is also impossible for me to speak an untruth."

The true object of Visvamitra's mission

Vasishtha thereupon said: 12. "O King!

Hear the esoteric truth about Rama. It is in every way to be guarded from publicity. Rama is not a human being. He is the Eternal and Supreme Spirit incarnated. 13. In order to relieve the earth of its burdens, Brahma, the creator prayed to Him to be incarnated as man. O pious one! It is He, the Supreme Being, that has been born in your house to Kausalya as Rama. 14. In your previous embodiment, you were Kasyapa Prajapati, the offspring of Brahma. This renowned lady, Kausalya was Aditi, the mother of celestials. 15. Observing continence, you two engaged yourselves in the worship of, and meditation on, Mahavishnu, and performed severe austerities. The Lord, who is noted as the lover of His devotees and bestower of boons on them, became pleased with you. 16. The Lord appeared to you and asked you to choose any boon you wanted. Thereupon, O sinless one, you wanted Him, the protector of the world, to be born as your offspring. 17. Having agreed to your request, He the Lord is now born as your son Rama. O King! Lakshmana who is none but Sesha would always be accompanying Rama. 18. The conch and the discus of Mahavishnu, the wielder of the mace, are incarnated as Bharata and Satrughna. The Lord's Power, Yogamaya, has been born as Sita, the daughter of Janaka. 19. To unite her with Rama is the real object of Visvamitra's arrival. This is a very closely guarded secret which you should not reveal to any one."

Rama Goes with Visvamitra (20-25)

20. Afterwards the king in a very happy mood resolved to send Rama, the consort of Lakshmi, along with Lakshmana under the care of Visvamitra, whom he duly worshipped and honoured. 21. Hearing the words of Vasishtha, King Dasaratha was overjoyed and considered himself to have attained the greatest aim of his life. 22.

Calling Rama and Lakshmana to his side and smelling the crown of their heads with affection and embracing them, he entrusted them to the care of Visvamitra. 23. The powerful sage Visvamitra was immensely pleased at this and expressed his joy by bestowing his unreserved blessings on all. Then accompanied by Rama and Lakshmana, who approached him fully equipped with bow, quiver, sword etc, he started from Ayodhya. (24-25). After travelling some distance, he called Rama with great affection and imparted to him two Vidyas, Bala and Atibala which were of celestial origin. Those who know these two Vidyas will be free from hunger and exhaustion.

Destruction of Tataka (26-33)

26. Then, after crossing the Ganga, they entered the region called the forest of Tataka. Visvamitra thereupon said as follows to Rama, who was endowed with the true quality of heroism. 27.

He said, "O Rama! Here dwells a Rakshasa woman called Tataka who is capable of taking any form she likes. She is a curse to all creatures passing this way. Kill her without any hesitation." 28. Agreeing to do so, Rama, the scion of Raghu's family, strung his bow and twanged it, filling the whole forest with that sound. 29. Hearing that sound and disturbed beyond measure by it, the fierce-looking Tataka rushed at Rama in a fit of terrible anger, like a rain cloud with a torrent of rain. 30. Being struck by Rama with a single arrow on the chest, that terrible creature fell down, vomiting a torrent of blood. 31. Then came out from her the form of an extremely lovely Yakshi bedecked with all kinds of beautiful ornaments. By Rama's grace this Yakshi, who out of a curse had become this ogress, was thus liberated. 32. Saluting Rama and circumambulating him, she, as ordered by Rama, went back to her divine abode.

REDEMPTION OF AHALYA

Destruction of Subahu (1-9)

1. After spending one night in a forest Ashrama of that place known as Kamashram and inhabited by a large group of Rishis and providing a charming scenery, the party slowly proceeded on their journey in the early morning. (2-3). On their reaching Siddhashrama, a resort of Siddhas and Charanas, the ascetics living there gave a cordial reception to Rama and Lakshmana at the instance of Visvamitra. Afterwards Rama requested the sage Visvamitra, "O holy one! Be pleased to start the disciplines connected with your sacrificial rite.

4. And show me the direction from which those heinous Rakshasas come to distress you." The sage Visvamitra agreed to do so and began the sacrificial rite along with the other ascetics of the place. 5. Towards noon appeared those two Rakshasas, Maricha and Subahu, who were capable of taking any form they liked. Approaching the Ashrama, they sent down a rain of blood and bones. 6. Thereupon Rama of mighty intellect, drawing his bowstring to his ear, released two arrows at the Rakshasas. 7. Wonder of wonders! One of those arrows, striking Maricha, hurled him away to a distance of a hundred Yojanas into the sea. 8. The second arrow, which was a fiery missile, struck Subahu dead, while his Rakshasa following was all destroyed by Lakshmana. 9. The Devas now showered a rain of flowers on Rama and Lakshmana. Their kettle drums began to sound, and the Siddhas and Charanas sang songs of praise.

Rama at the ashrama of Gautama (10-18)

(10-11). Viswamitra bestowed all honours on Rama, which he richly deserved. Moved by respect and love, he seated Rama on his lap, and with his eyes brimming with tears, embraced him. He kept Rama along with the brother Lakshmana in his Ashrama for three days, feeding them with ripe fruits and other edibles, and entertaining them with ancient stories and anecdotes.

12. On the fourth day, the sage said to Rama: "O Rama! Let us go and see a great sacrifice that is about to take place. 13. In the palace of the great king Janaka situated in the city of Videha, there is a divine bow deposited there by Maheswara. (14-16). You can have a look at that mighty bow. King Janaka too will welcome you with honours." Saying so, Viswamitra started with some other Munis as well as Rama and Lakshmana, and went towards the Ganga to reach the place where the holy Ashrama of Gautama stood and where the lady Ahalya was engaged in austerities. The place was full of trees laden with celestial flowers and fruits, but devoid of any birds or animals. Seeing the place so lifeless, the lotus-eyed Rama now asked the Muni as follows: (17-18). "Whose Ashrama is this? It looks like a very holy and extremely charming place. I find it full of trees with flowers and fruits, but without any living creatures. It gives me great delight to be here. All these look wonderful. O great sage! Please tell me all the facts about this place and its peculiarities."

Curse on Ahalya & her Redemption (19-42)

Viswamitra said: 19. "O Rama! Listen to what I say about the old traditions of this place. There was a great ascetic named Gautama, noblest among the observers of Dharma and famous all over the world. He adored Sri Hari with the austerities he was given to practising. 20. Highly pleased with him for the very strict way in which he observed Brahmacharya, Brahma bestowed upon him his own daughter Ahalya, the most handsome girl of her times, noted also for her devotion to the discipline of service. 21. That great ascetic Gautama was staying with Ahalya in this place. Now Indra developed a great passion for this girl Ahalya, and was on the look out for an opportunity to enjoy her by deception. 22. An opportune moment came for him when the sage had gone out of the Ashrama for some time. Indra then approached Ahalya in the disguise of Gautama and after gratifying his passion was departing thence in haste when the sage Gautama returned. 23. Seeing Indra going away disguised in his own (the sage's) form, Gautama was terribly angry, and he asked Indra, "Sirrah! You miscreant! Who are you that have assumed my form? 24. Tell the truth. Otherwise I shall certainly reduce you to ashes by a curse!" Thereupon Indra replied: "I am Indra, the chief of the celestials. I have been a slave to Cupid, the god of love. I seek your pardon and protection. 25. I have done a despicable act, the evil-natured fellow that I am." Thereupon Gautama, with eyes red with anger, pronounced a curse upon him. (26-27). Gautama cursed in great wrath: "O evil one! You who revel in the female genitals! I curse you to be deformed with a thousand female genitals on your body." After thus cursing Indra, the chief of celestials, he entered his hermitage, and there saw Ahalya standing, trembling in fear and with palms joined in salutation. Gautama said to her: "O degenerate one! You will be converted into a rock in this Ashrama. (28-29). Without any food and drink day and night, and subjected to all the inclemencies of weather like rain, sun, wind etc., you will be stationed here in the practice of severe austerity, meditating on the Supreme Being Rama dwelling in the hearts of all. This place, which has been my hermitage, will hereafter be without any living creature. (30-32). After you have spent several thousand years in this condition, Sri Rama, the son of Dasaratha, along with his brother Lakshmana will be coming to this place. When he places his feet on the rock, with which you will now gain identity by my curse, you will be freed from sin. You will then adore Rama with great devotion, circumambulating him and prostrating before him. Liberated from the effects of the curse, you will again have opportunity to serve me."

(33-36). Saying so, Gautama went away and took his residence on that greatest of mountains, the Himalayas. From that day, O Rama, unseen by any living being, Ahalya has been till this present moment observing severe penance eschewing all food, and ever awaiting the holy contact of the dust of your feet. Now deign to purify Ahalya, the daughter of Brahma and the wife of Gautama." Saying so, Viswamitra took Rama by the hand to the place where Ahalya was standing as a stone and observing the most rigorous penance. On Rama placing his feet on the stone, he saw Ahalya coming out of it and standing before him.

(37-39). Rama of Raghu's line thereupon saluted Ahalya, and announced himself to her. Then did Ahalya see Rama, the best of Raghu's line, along with Lakshmana, in his form as Mahavishnu—wearing a yellow silk, sporting in His four arms the conch, discus, mace and lotus; equipped with bow and arrows; revealing a face with lotus-like eyes and a comely smile playing on it; bearing the Srivatsa mark on His chest; and illumining the ten quarters with the lustre of his blue emerald-like splendour. Such was the form of Rama that Ahalya now saw. (40-42). Seeing Rama, the consort of Ramā, Ahalya shed tears of joy. Remembering the words of Gautama, she recognised Rama to be Narayana Himself. That holy lady, with her eyes brimming with tears, worshipped Rama in due form with Arghya and other ingredients. Then falling before him in full prostration and getting up, she saw the lotus-eyed Rama once again, and with horripilations all over her body, and voice choking with emotion, began to praise him with a hymn.

Ahalya's Hymn (43-65)

Ahalya said: 43. O Thou Indweller of the whole universe! Blessed am I with the contact I have had with the particles of dust adhering to Thy lotus-feet—the feet which form only an object of quest for Brahma and Sankara with concentrated minds, but which I have now been fortunate to contact even with the physical body.

44. Everything about Thee is wonderful indeed O Rama! Thy human form only deludes the world. For, Thou, the super-magician immersed in the plenitude of Bliss and infilling the whole universe with Thy presence, art without any particular form having hands and feet; but yet as the Incarnate Thou art none the less moving about as a man with a particular form. 45. He the dust of whose lotus-feet rendered the waters of the Ganga sacred enough to sanctify even great beings like Brahma, even He is now present here for my corporeal eyes to see. This indeed is a rare good fortune, indescribable by words, arising from some meritorious deeds of mine in the past. 46. To none else is the adoration of my heart directed than to Sri Hari now embodied in a human form in His incarnation as Rama revealing a body of exquisite beauty, having broad eyes like lotus-petals and holding a bow in hand. 47. He whose lotus-feet are always the object of quest for the Srutis, He whose navel-lotus is the birth place of Brahma the Creator; He whose holy name of Rama is the dearest among His thousand names to Lord Siva, the destroyer of cities—on that Sri Ramachandra I contemplate in my heart. 48. He whose deeds in His incarnations are glorified in Brahma-loka by sages like Narada and Divinities like Bhava (Siva) and the lotus-born Brahma, as also by Saraswati the goddess of learning with outbursts of bliss-inspired streams of tears, wetting her breasts—in that Sri Rama I take refuge. 49. Rama, the adorable, is the supreme Self; He is the eternal and all-pervading Being, the Self-luminous Consciousness by whom everything is revealed. He is the First Cause who is without an end. For the blessing of the world He has now assumed a form of heart-ravishing beauty. 50. He is the One Being that forms the cause of the creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe. The free and the perfect being that He is, He assumes the different names of Brahma, Vishnu and Maheswara when He reflects Himself in the three Gunas of His Maya, namely Rajas, Sattva and Tamas, respectively. 51. Obeisance to Thee, O Rama! Thy Lotus feet are ever held by Sri on her breast and fondled. It was with a single one of those feet that Thou didst measure the three worlds in ancient times. Again those feet are holy enough to be contemplated upon by sages who have abandoned identification with the narrow self. 52. Thou art the origin of all the worlds, nay, Thou art the world itself, in its totality, and the support of the worlds as well. Unrelated to any second existence, Thou art the transcendent and unitary Being. 53. O Rama! Thou art denoted by the sound symbol Om, but Thou art also the all-pervading Being transcending the scope of any verbal description. Thou who dost comprehend the totality of existence in Thyself, art both the object and the idea. 54. By Thy Power of Maya which is capable of projecting this multiplicity, Thou, the Unitary Being, seemest to be manifested as the all—Prakriti the Root Cause, its evolutes known as the categories, the worlds forming their products, sufferings and enjoyments forming the fruits of creative activity, and the various types of rites and deeds that yield such fruits. 55. Those who are deluded by Thy Maya do not recognise Thy identity with the Supreme Lord of Maya, and consider Thee only to be a human being. 56. Like the sky Thou art all-pervading, being both within and without and everywhere. Pure, unattached and unchanging, Thou art the eternal, immaculate, and Undecaying Being who can be described only as Pure Consciousness and Pure Existence. 57. O All-pervading One! The senseless and ignorant woman that I am, how can I know Thee in truth and in reality? So, O Rama, I salute Thee a hundred times with whole-hearted devotion. 58. O Lord! Wherever I might be and at all times, may

I have unobstructed devotion to Thy lotus feet. 59. Salutations to Thee, the Supreme Spirit directing all! Salutations to Thee, the lover of all devotees! Salutations to Thee, the master of all the senses! Salutations to Thee, who dwellest in all Jivas. 60. Adoration to Rama in the company of his brother Lakshmana—Rama who is the saviour of the Jivas from the cycle of births and deaths (Samsara), who is the One without a second, who is brilliant like a million suns, who sports a bow and an arrow in his hands, who has the lustre of a blue cloud, who is dressed in a cloth of bewitching golden colour, who bears ear-pendants studded with precious gems and who has eyes broad and beautiful like the petals of the lotus flower.

61. In this way praising, circumambulating and prostrating before Rama, the Eternal Being embodied as a scion of the Raghu's line, she stood before him; and on being permitted by him, she went away to join her husband, the sage Gautama. 62. He who studies with devotion this hymn of Ahalya will be free from all sins. He will attain to

By studying in immorality, theft and drink, of cruel this hymn with a mind concentrated on conduct towards parents and brothers, Rama, a woman, even if she be unfit for bearing children, will have an issue within always—even such a one will attain to one year. 64. RAMA'S MARRIAGE WITH SITA

Journey to Mithila (1-5)

1. Afterwards Viswamitra said to Rama and Lakshmana, "O Darlings! Let us now go to the country of Mithila governed by King Janaka. 2. After witnessing the great sacrifice that is being performed there, we shall return to Ayodhya. Saying so, he along with Rama and Lakshmana, set off for crossing the river Ganga. But the boatman there refused to take Rama into the boat

The boatman said: 3. "O Lord! I would like to wash and cleanse your feet first. What is the difference between a stone and wooden things? The news has spread that the dust of your feet can transform anything into a human being. (It happened with Ahalya.) 4. Therefore I shall clean your feet of all the dust on it and then take you to the other shore. If this is not done, there is the danger of my boat being converted into a young woman. In that case, O Master, the livelihood of my family will be endangered." 5. Saying so, he washed the feet of Rama and then took the party to the other side of the river. Then Viswamitra along with Rama, the leader of Raghu's line, proceeded to the kingdom of Mithila.

Breaking of Siva's Bow (6-27)

(6-7). By morning they reached Mithila—the Kingdom of Janaka-Videha. Viswamitra went to the quarters of the Rishis and took his station there. Hearing that Viswamitra had come to his city, King Janaka was rejoiced, and gathering all the necessary ingredients for worship, came along with his preceptor in great joy to the sage, prostrated before him and adored him in the proper way. 8. Seeing the two princes of Raghu's line, illuminating all the quarters by their brilliance like another sun and moon, and possessed of all auspicious marks on their body, Janaka asked: 9. "Who are these two heroic boys resembling the children of celestials? Whose sons are they? My mind is filled with joy on seeing them, just like the experience one gets on seeing Nara and Narayana." 10. Pleased at these words, the sage Viswamitra said to Janaka, delighting him, "These are two brothers—Rama and Lakshmana. They are sons of King Dasaratha.

(11-16). "In order to protect my Yajna (sacrificial rites) from the depredations of Rakshasas, I brought them from the palace of their father. On the way this heroic Rama of Raghu's line killed with a single arrow Tataka—the terror of the world. Afterwards, arriving at my Ashrama, he killed Subahu and other Rakshasas, who were obstructing the sacrificial rites there; and hurled away Maricha, their associate, into the sea. Reaching the banks of the holy river Ganga and the Ashrama of Gautama situated there, he by the touch of his feet redeemed Ahalya, the wife of Gautama, converted into a stone as the result of a curse. He restored her to her human form. After himself honouring Ahalya, he was adored by her. Now he has come over to your palace. He wants to see the great bow of Siva that is in your possession. It is well known that royalties from all places have been coming to see it. Therefore, O great king, be pleased to show him that bow. After seeing it, his idea is to go back to Ayodhya to join his father."

17. Hearing these words of the sage, King Janaka, who was a knower of Dharma, understood that these princes deserved all respectful reception. Therefore he extended to them honours with rites prescribed by the Sastras. 18. Then the king sent for his highly accomplished minister and said to him, "Let the bow of Parameswara be brought here soon to be shown to Rama". (19-20) After the minister had departed, King Janaka said to Viswamitra, "If Rama is able to lift and string this bow, I shall certainly bestow my daughter Sita on him." At this, Viswamitra looking at Rama with a smile, said: 21. "Let it be so. Without delay do please show this noble bow to Rama of unlimited prowess." While the sage was uttering these words, the bow was brought there by a set of carriers.

22. Five thousand men of strong build were carrying that bow studded with innumerable gems and diamonds and having on it numerous mini bells. (23-24) That highly competent minister exhibited the bow before Rama. Glad on seeing it, Rama tightened his wearing cloth, and as in sport, lifted the bow with his left hand and, in the presence of all the assembled rulers, strung it. 25. Holding the bow in his left hand and pulling the string by the right, Rama, who embodied in himself the energy of the whole universe, broke the bow producing a tremendous sound that resounded from all the quarters. 26. That sound penetrated into all the worlds—those of celestials, of men, and of the Titans. With wonder, the celestials, stationing themselves in the sky, looked at the scene. 27. They covered the earth with a rain of flowers, recited songs and panegyrics in praise of Rama and sounded their kettle-drums, while the celestial artistes danced in joy.

Sita's Choice of Rama (28-32)

28. Seeing the bow broken, King Janaka embraced Rama—the noblest of Raghu's line, while the womenfolk, stationing themselves in the courtyards of their quarters, looked on in great amazement. 29-32.

Then arrived Sita on the scene in all her natural splendour enhanced by her decorations. She was adorned with various kinds of ornaments like pearl necklaces and ear-pendants. On her feet she had anklets that produced a delightful tinkling sound. Dressed in a silken wearing-cloth and in a thin upper cloth that faintly revealed the contours of her breasts, the golden-hued Sita advanced towards Rama with a smiling face, and put on his neck a golden necklace which she held in her right hand. Her face, wreathed in smiles, revealed the supreme joy of her heart. Viewing through the windows of the galleries, the ladies of the royal household saw with great delight the forms of Rama and Sita whose exquisite beauty charmed the whole world. Now King Janaka, versed in all scriptures, said to sage Viswamitra as follows:

Arrangements for Marriage (33-44)

33. The King said, "O great sage Viswamitra! Send letters soon announcing this news to King Dasaratha, so that he may go over here soon with his sons. 34. Let him be pleased to come with his wives and ministers to attend the marriage ceremony of the princes." Accordingly speedy messengers were despatched immediately. 35. Reaching Ayodhya quickly, they communicated the news of Rama's great success to the valiant King Dasaratha, who received the news with overwhelming joy. (36-39). He ordered his ministers to make quick preparations for going to Mithila. He said, "Let army divisions consisting of elephant regiments, cavalry and chariots be ordered to proceed to that city of Mithila in advance. Order my chariot to be made ready so that I may start even today. Let there be no delay on any account. Arrange for my preceptor Vasishtha to proceed in advance with his consort and his sacred fires. So also let the queens, the mothers of Rama, proceed in advance." Thus, after arranging for the journey of all others, Dasaratha got into his great chariot, and accompanied by a grand army proceeded to Mithila in all haste. The news of his arrival at Mithila reached the ears of King Janaka, filling the mind of that Rajarshi with great joy.

40. Accompanied by his preceptor Sat-ananda, King Janaka hurried to receive the august guest, and arranged for a reception ceremony according to the programmes prescribed by custom and scriptural texts for such occasions. 41. Then Rama and Lakshmana prostrated at the feet of their father in salutation. Dasaratha who was all joy, now spoke to Rama. 42. He said, "O Rama! I am fortunate to see your lotus-like face again. Due to the grace of the sage Viswamitra, all circumstances have turned in our favour, bringing great good fortune to us." 43. With these words he embraced Rama and smelt the crown of his head again and again, and thereby attained to the acme of joy like one enjoying the bliss of Brahman. 44. Next. Dasaratha with his wives and sons was provided accommodation by Janaka in a spacious palace which had arrangements for every form of comfort and enjoyment.

The Marriage Ceremony (45-57)

(45-48). Soon after, on an auspicious day at an auspicious hour, King Janaka, who was well acquainted with Dharma, led Rama and his brothers to a specially erected marriage pavilion, which was supported by columns studded with precious gems. The hall was spacious, splendidous, and well-decorated with festoons, flags and canopies and a profusion of pearl strings, fruits and flowers. Crowds of Brahmanas, learned in Vedas and wearing golden ornaments, were present there, while womenfolk, dressed in their best attire, and adorned with shining jewels, stood on all sides. Dancing, music and playing on percussion instruments added to the holiday atmosphere. Into such a splendid marriage pavilion Rama was brought and seated on a golden pedestal embellished with every kind of rare jewels.

(49-51). The preceptor Satananda now honoured the sages Vasishtha and Viswa-

mitra with all due ceremony and seated them on either side of Rama. He then lighted the sacred fire before which the marriage ceremony was to be performed. Now Sita, resplendent with all jewellery and other decorations, was ushered into the marriage pavilion. Next, King Janaka with his consort went near Rama, washed his feet, and sprinkled that water on their own heads. (52-56). That water from the feet of Rama the Incarnate is identical with the water with which Mahavishnu's feet were washed and which Brahma and Siva consider holy enough to bear on their heads. Next, holding Sita's hand Janaka gifted her to Rama along with offerings of water and Akshata (unbroken grains of rice), according to the rites of Panigrahana (marriage symbolised by the holding of the spouse's hand by the bridegroom). He said: "With this I am handing over to you my daughter Sita, lotus-eyed and bedecked with pearls and gold. O Rama, the greatest of the Raghus! May you be pleased with this offering." Uttering these words, Janaka now placed the hand of Sita in Rama's to symbolise his having given her over to him with a heart over-flowing with joy, just like that of the deity of the milk-ocean when he gave away Lakshmi in marriage to Mahavishnu. On this occasion Janaka gave away his own daughter Urmila in marriage to Lakshmana, and his brother's daughters Srutikirti and Mandavi to Bharata and Satrughna respectively. 57. United with their wives, the handsome princes shone resplendent like another set of Lokapalas (the celestial guardians of the quarters).

Janaka on the Antecedents of Sita (58-75)

58. Now that the marriage ceremony was over, Janaka narrated to the sages Vasishtha and Viswamitra, an account about Sita's past, which he happened to hear from Narada. 59. Janaka said: "While I was once ploughing a field with the idea of making it into a holy site for a sacrifice, I got a beautiful female child from one of the furrows in the field (Sita-mukha). 60. Looking lovingly upon that moon-like infant as my own daughter, I handed her over to the care of my consort. (61-62). One day while I had withdrawn myself into solitude, there came sage Narada, singing to the accompaniment of his noted Vina, hymns in praise of the all-pervading Narayana. After he was duly honoured and seated on a comfortable seat, the sage Narada said to me: "Hear from me a secret that will lead to your welfare. (63-64). For the blessing of devotees, for the destruction of Ravana and for the achievement of the purposes of the celestials, the Supreme Lord, the director and master of the senses, has incarnated Himself in a human body, which he has assumed by the power of His Maya. He is born as the son of King Dasaratha as the world-famous Sri Rama. In this incarnation the Lord has taken a fourfold form. 65. His spiritual counterpart, Yoga-maya, has manifested Herself in your house. Strive in every way to give her in marriage to Rama and Rama alone. 66. For, being (67-72). "Ever since that time I have been looking upon Sita as Mahavishnu's consort Lakshmi, and planning how I could arrange to give her, my auspicious daughter, in marriage to Rama. In my ancestral palace there was in safe keeping this bow, which was deposited by Maheswara in times gone by after he destroyed the Tripuras. I resolved to make the stringing of this bow, which would humble the pride of any one attempting to do so, the wager for one aspiring to marry her. O great sage! By your grace Rama has come here to see this bow, and my long-standing desire has been fulfilled. Today, O Rama, I am fortunate to see Thee seated together with Sita on the same seat as husband and wife. Indeed the purpose of my life has thus been fulfilled.

Rama's Departure to Ayodhya (76-82)

(76-78). After having praised Rama in this way, King Janaka gave valuable presents to that high-souled one of Raghu's line. He presented him with a hundred crores of gold coins (dinara), a thousand chariots, ten thousand horses, six hundred elephants, a lakh of foot-soldiers and three hundred female attendants. Besides he gave Sita, his dear daughter, valuable clothes and jewellery, resplendent with gems and pearls. (79-80). After honouring the sages like Vasishtha, the princes Bharata and Lakshmana, as also King Dasaratha according to protocol, King Janaka bade farewell to the Lord of the Raghus. Thereupon, with tears in their eyes of the king embraced their weeping daughter Sita, and advised her: 81. "O dear one, be devoted to the father and mother of your husband. Be with Rama wherever he is. Observing the duties of a chaste wife (pativrata), live in happiness."

82. Loud and awe-inspiring was the tumultuous sound produced by the orchestra of drums and other percussion instruments of men and celestials, signalling the departure of Rama from Mithila to Ayodhya.

THE DEFEAT OF BHARGAVA RAMA

Confrontation with Bhargava Rama (1-20)

1. When Rama and party had proceeded about three Yojanas from Mithila, King Dasaratha was taken aback to see various omens causing terror in the mind. 2. Saluting the preceptor Vasishtha, he said to him, "Venerable Sir! How is it that portents foreboding evil are seen on all sides?" (3-4). To him, Vasishtha replied:

"There are no doubt some indications showing that some terrible events are going to take place. But there are also simultaneous indications to the effect that their effects will be short-lived. Don't you see how auspicious animals are circumambulating you?" While they were thus conversing, a terrific wind began to blow. (5-8) It blinded the vision of all by raising clouds of dust. Proceeding a little further they came across a luminous mass, brilliant like numerous suns or an assemblage of flashing streaks of lightning. Closing nearer, Dasaratha saw therein the awe-inspiring form of Rama, the son of Jamadagni, the terror of Kshatriyas, and the destroyer of Karthavirya. Tall and blue like a rain-cloud in complexion, he with his matted locks and weapons consisting of a formidable bow and a battle axe, looked like the god of death embodied.

9. Confronted by him, King Dasaratha

was in great fright and forgetting even to make the customary offerings at the reception of a great personage, he beseeched him, saying, "Save us, O mighty one! Save us! (10-14). May you be pleased to spare the lives of my sons." With these words King Dasaratha made prostrations to him. But spurning him contemptuously, he (Jamadagni's son Rama) turned towards Sri Rama, and with body trembling in anger, said the following ominous words: "Sirrah, you, scum of the Kshatriya race! You have the temerity to go about the earth, bearing my name. If you are really a Kshatriya, take up my challenge for a duel. Breaking an old and flimsy bow, you go about boasting about your prowess. If you are able to string this bow of Vishnu that is in my possession, I shall consider you as one born in Raghu's line and therefore worthy of a fight. If you fail, I shall kill the whole lot of you. For, know me to be Jamadagni's son Rama, the destroyer of the whole tribe of Kshatriyas." As he spoke these violently threatening words, there arose severe tremors of the earth. (15-17). A blinding darkness now came upon the eyes of all. Rama, the heroic son of Dasaratha, now looked angrily at Rama of Bhrigu's clan and snatched away the bow from the latter's hand. Possessed as he was of great prowess, he easily strung it, and fixing to it an arrow that he took from the quiver, addressed the scion of Bhrigu's clan thus: "O great Brahmana! Hark unto me. Show the target for my arrow. For an arrow shot by me shall never go in vain. (18-20). Reply quickly to my command. Shall I with this arrow destroy all your prospects in the worlds to come, or those in this? Retribution so severe shall fall on you that you would have no place here or in the hereafter." When Sri Rama demanded in this way, the face of Rama of Bhrigu's line became distorted out of a sense of humiliation. Suddenly the memory of past incidents flashed in his mind, and he began to speak as follows :

The Hymn of Bhargava Rama (21-45)

(21-23). "O Rama, Thou great hero! I have now understood Thee to be the Supreme Lord Mahavishnu, who creates, preserves and dissolves the universe—the Eternal Being residing in the hearts of all. In my boyhood I sought to adore Mahavishnu through the practice of austerities at the holy spot known as Chakratirtha. Through austere living and unwavering concentration day after day, I propitiated the great Narayana, the indweller in all as their essence. Then, O great prince of Raghu's line, Mahavishnu, the Supreme Divinity of lotus-like face, appeared to me sporting the conch, discus, mace and other emblems in His hands, and said: (24-29). 'O holy one! Now stop your austere practices, for they have come to their fruition. You are endowed with a part of My divine power. By virtue of it, you will be able to destroy Kartavirya of Hehaya dynasty, the slayer of your father, and thus achieve the purpose for which you have been performing these austerities. After that you shall destroy the tribe of Kshatriyas in twenty-one campaigns, and then give as gift the whole of the earth you have conquered from them to Kasyapa. I, the eternal Being, will be incarnated on earth as Dasaratha's son in the Treta-yuga. You will meet me then, and on that occasion, you will remit to Me the power that I have endowed you with earlier. After that you will remain on earth till the end of Brahma's current day, performing austerities.' The Lord disappeared after commanding me thus. I have finished the mission entrusted to me. O Rama! Thou art verily that Mahavishnu. Implored by Brahma, Thou hast incarnated Thyself. Thou hast now taken back that divine power that Thou hadst endowed me with.

30. My life has today become fruitful. I have now come within the purview of Thy remembrance. It is difficult for Brahma and other divinities to attain to Thee. The scriptures declare that Thou transcendent Prakriti, the matrix of this universe. 31. The six states of ignorance like birth, growth, etc., are not in Thee. For Thou art ever the full and the changeless, devoid of all movements (which are characteristic only of adjuncts which ignorant beings attribute to Thee). 32. Just as there is foam in water and smoke in fire, so the whole of the objective world is projected in Thee by Thy Maya (Power), who has her seat and support in Thee and who has no independent existence apart from being Thy object. 33. As long as the Jivas are enshrouded in Maya, they do not know Thee. In the individual, Maya functions as Avidya, ignorance, obstructing Vidya or Enlightenment. This Avidya or Ignorance, experienced as a positive entity opposed to Vidya, is present in the absence of discriminative intelligence (avicāritasiddha). 34. What is called Jiva is the reflection of the power of Pure Consciousness (cicchakti) in the complex aggregate of a body-mind generated by Ignorance

(Avidya). 35. As long as one feels the 'I-sense' in relation to the complex aggregate of body-mind, Prana, Buddhi, etc., so long one is subject to the experience of agency and enjoyership, of happiness and misery. 36. The Atman in himself has no transmigratory involvement. Nor has the Buddhi in itself consciousness or sentiency. When these two, the Atman and the Buddhi unite into one through imaginary identification arising from lack of discriminative reflection, then we get that complex entity called the Jiva (the individualised and embodied Atman). 37. The insentient body-mind complex, by identification with the pure sentiency that is the Atman, assumes sentiency. So also the Atman, who is pure sentiency, assumes insentient by identification with the insentient body-mind complex. It is just like the mutual superimposition of the properties of fire and water in the phenomenon of lightning in which water (cloud) and fire with opposite properties get a unified presentation as the brilliant and fiery lightning. 38. Never shall man be free from that enormous body of miseries arising from involvement in transmigratory life brought about by the above-described state of Ignorance until he gets the good fortune of association with Thy ardent devotees. 39. When man adores Thee with devotion fostered by association with holy men, then Maya (Ignorance) both recedes and gets attenuated. 40. When this state of mental purity is attained, an aspirant will get an authentic teacher who is endowed with knowledge derived from the realisation of Thee. Gaining, through such a teacher, the knowledge of the true meaning of the scriptural dicta, he will attain liberation by Thy grace. 41. Therefore for those who have no devotion to Thee, there is not the slightest chance, even in the course of a myriad cosmic cycles, of gaining enlightenment and liberation. Thus he will not have happiness even in life. 42. Therefore bless me, so that in life after life I am born with devotion to Thee and with opportunities for association with Thy devotees; for, that is the only means for the dispelling of Ignorance. 43. Men who have true devotion to Thee, and who by their life and words propagate the path of devotion, purify the whole world. What then to speak of the redeeming effect of their life on their own kith and kin, including their ancestors! 44. Salutations to Thee, O Lord of the universe! Salutations to Thee, the generator and augmentator of devotion in aspirants! Salutation to Thee the embodiment of mercy and the Existence without end! To Thee, Ramachandra, my salutations! 45. O Lord! Whatever meritorious deeds I have performed for the attainment of higher realms in the hereafter, may all those be the target for Thy arrow. With salutations, I dedicate them to Thee, O Rama!"

Rama Bestows his Grace on Bhar-gava Rama (46-50)

(46-48). Sri Rama, the embodiment of mercy, now graciously said to Rama of Bhrigu's line: "I am much pleased with you, O holy one. Whatever you desire, I shall grant without any hesitation." Then in a highly elated mood, that scion of Bhrigu's line said to Sri Rama: "O Rama!

Thou the destroyer of the demon Madhu! If Thou art gracious to me, grant unto me communion with Thy devotees as also firm and constant devotion to Thee. 49. May Thou be pleased to grant also that even a person without devotion, if he recites and studies this hymn regularly, comes to develop love and knowledge of Thee! And what is more, may he have the blessing of remembering Thee at the time of death!" 50. Rama, the scion of Raghu's line, granted these prayers of his. Then Rama of Bhrigu's clan, adored Sri Rama, circumambulated him and, permitted by him, departed to Mount Mahendra.

Return to Ayodhya (51-57)

51. With his heart overflowing with joy and again, as if he had got him back from the jaws of death, and his surging delight welled up from his eyes as tears. (52-53). Then with a mind elated and peaceful, King Dasaratha resumed his journey to his city of Ayodhya. Reaching Ayodhya,

Rama, Lakshmana, Bharata and Satrughna in the company of her son Indra and his lived happily with their wives in their respective palaces. Rejoicing with his parents,

Rama spent his days with Sita at Ayodhya in heavenly bliss like Mahavishnu with Sri Devi in Vaikuntha. 54. At that time one day, the brother of Kaikeyi and uncle of Bharata named Yudhajit, came to Ayodhya in order to take Bharata on a visit to his kingdom. 55. The loving and heroic King Dasaratha received Yudhajit with all honours, and permitted Bharata along with Satrughna to go with him. 56. Kausalya in the company of Rama and Sita shone just as Aditi, the mother of the Devas, does 57. Rama is the most distinguished among the Divinities on account of his numerous excellences. His fame is sung about in all the spheres. He is, as it were, an embodiment of the totality of joy in the whole universe. His glory is eternal and his being undecaying. Devoid of the ignorance-generating film of Maya, He is the changeless One and the Lord of all. Yet, Sri Rama resided in Ayodhya with Sita, as if he were a human being following the ways of the life of Ignorance.

CONVERSATION BETWEEN RAMA AND NARADA

Hymn of Narada (1-31)

(1-3). One day Narada, the divine sage, descended from the skies to the presence of Rama, who was decorated with varieties of ornaments, who was seated on a gem-studded throne, who had the complexion resembling the colour of a blue lily, who was wearing on his neck the jewel called Kaustubha, who was being fanned with ornamental Chouries, and who was sitting at leisure chewing betels in the inner apartment of his palace. 4. Shining like a white crystal and pure like the autumnal moon the divine-looking Narada presented himself all of a sudden before Rama. 5. Seeing him, Rama got up from his seat immediately. With palms joined in salutation and moved by great devotion, he along with Sita prostrated himself before the sage. 6. Highly gratified, Rama said to the sage: " O great sage! For one caught in the cycle of transmigratory life (Samsara), it is indeed a rare blessing to get your company. Much more is it so, O sage, for us who are immersed in worldliness. 7. O holy one! The blessing that I have now got must be the result of some very meritorious deeds I have done in the past; for, such meritorious deeds alone can help a worldly person to have the contact of a holy man. 8. Therefore I have derived very great satisfaction by seeing you, O great sage! Is there anything that I can do for you? If so, tell me, what it is. And I shall try to accomplish it."

9. Thereupon Narada said to Rama, the lover of all devotees: "O Rama! Why art Thou trying to misguide me by such words, as if Thou wert just a worldly man? 10. O' All-pervading One! Thy statement that Thou art one involved in Samsara is true, indeed, in a way. For, is not Maya, the First Cause of the whole universe, Thy Consort? 11. It is by Thy mere presence that she generates Brahma and the other offspring of hers. It is with Thee as her support that Maya, constituted of the three Gunas, subsists. 12. It is by Thy support that she constantly gives birth to three types of beings—those that are Sattvika (Sukla or white), Rajasa (Lohita or red) and Tamasa (Krishna or black). In this huge household of these three worlds, Thou art truly the master-householder. (13-19). Thou art Vishnu; and Sita, Lakshmi Devi. Thou art Siva; and Sita, Parvati. Thou art Brahmā; and Sita, Saraswati. Thou art the Sun-deity; and Sita, Prabha (luminosity). Thou art the moon-deity; and Sita, auspicious Rohini. Thou art Indra; and Sita, Indrani. Thou art the Fire-Deity, and Sita, Svaha. Thou art Yama, the all-destroying Time (Kala); and Sita, his consort, Samyamini. Thou, O Lord of the worlds, art Nirriti; and Sita, his consort Tamasi. Thou art Varuna; and Sita, his consort Bhargavi. Thou art Vayu the wind-deity; and Sita, Sadagati. Thou art Kubera, O Rama; and Sita, prosperity. Thou art Rudra the destroyer; and Sita, Rudrani. To put it briefly, whatever female form is there in this universe, that the auspicious

Sita is. And whatever male form there is, consciousness reflects. 23. Pure Consciousness that Thou art, O scion of the Raghu's line! has three adjuncts—gross, subtle and causal. Therefore in these three worlds, there is none but you two. 20. What is called the Undifferentiated (avyākrita) is verily the category of Ignorance arising from Thy reflection. (abhāsoditam). Out of it has come Mahat-tattva (the great element); from that the Sutratman (the cosmic I-sense); and from that, the cosmic subtle body (Linga). 21. It is the complex constituted of I-sense, Buddhi (intellect), the five vital energies (Prana) and the five Indriyas (senses) that undergo birth, death, joy and sorrow. It is what learned men call the Linga-sarira (subtle body of the individual). 22. Verily, it is He (the reflection of consciousness in the above-mentioned complex called Linga) that is called the Jiva. It is the same complex formation in the cosmic sense that manifests as Hiranyagarbha, having the universe as his body (Jaganmaya), while in the individual sense it is the Jiva with the individual physical body. The indescribable and beginningless Avidya (Maya) is what is called the causal Adjunct (Kārano-pādhi), the medium in which Pure Consciousness reflects. 23. Pure Consciousness has three adjuncts—gross, subtle and causal. When identified with these, Pure Consciousness is called Jiva, Cosmic or individual. Devoid of them He is the Supreme Lord. 24. O the noblest of Raghu's line! Thou art the Pure Consciousness, the Witness—what is the opposite of the transmigratory life characterised by these three states of waking (Jagrat) dream (Svapna) and sleep (Sushupti). 25. The whole universe has originated from Thee; it remains established in Thee; and it dissolves in Thee. Therefore Thou art verily the cause of all manifestations. 26. By misunderstanding the Pure Consciousness (Atma) to be an individual Self (Jiva), fear arises, just as when a rope is mistaken for a snake. So knowing the 'I' (the Self in its true nature) to be the Supreme Self, one is rid of all fear and misery. 27. Thou art the self of all, because Thou who art the light of Pure Consciousness illuminest the Buddhi associated with all bodies. 28. Just as out of ignorance one superimposes a snake on a rope, so are all entities superimposed upon Thee. When Thou, the substratum, art perceived, all these superimpositions dissolve in Thee. Therefore one should always practise this discipline of knowledge. 29. In those who are endowed with true devotion to Thee this knowledge as an experience dawns by stages. Therefore it is only those who have devotion to Thee that attain to liberation (Mukti). 30. I am the servant of Thy devotees and of those who are devoted to Thy devotees. Therefore, deign to bless me, O lord! and let not Thy Maya delude me. 31. I am, O Lord! the offspring of Brahmā who was generated from Thy navel-lotus, and hence Thy grandchild. Therefore, O Rama! Deign to save me who am Thy devotee."

Narada's Departure (32-41)

(32-35). Saying so, Narada prostrated himself several times before Rama and with tears of joy flowing from his eyes, continued, "O Rama! I have been sent here by Brahmā. Thou, O the noblest one of Rahgu's clan, hast been born in this world for the destruction of Ravana. Now Thy father is going to install Thee as the ruler for the protection of the country. If Thou dost get busy with the affairs of State, the destruction of Ravana may not take place. But Thou hast taken the vow of relieving the world of its burdens. May Thou be pleased to fulfil that vow; for Thou art devoted to truth." Hearing these words, Rama said to Narada with a smile: (36-39). "O Narada! Listen to me. There is nothing that is not within my knowledge. What I had promised to do earlier, shall certainly be fulfilled. There need be no doubt about it. I shall be destroying the whole tribe of these Rakshasas and thus be relieving the earth of its burden. Only gradually, according as their Prarabdha (operating Karma), which takes effect only with the passage of time, would I be doing this. For the destruction of Ravana, I shall be starting for the forest of Dandakaranya tomorrow itself. I shall be staying

PROPOSAL OF INSTALLING RAMA AS YUVARAJA

Dasaratha's Decision to install Rama (1-16)

(1-2) One of those days, King Dasaratha called his preceptor Vasishtha to his side privately and said to him, "O great sage! Rama is receiving the repeated and unanimous praise of the citizens, learned men, the elders and above all the ministers. 3. Therefore, O sage, I desire to install Rama, the lotus-eyed, who is endowed with all the great qualities and who is the eldest of my sons, as my successor. I am after all getting aged. 4. Bharata and Satrughna have gone to their uncle's home. It is necessary that we should do this installation quickly tomorrow itself. Please give your permission for this with your full heart. 5. And get together all the necessary ingredients for installation ceremony. Give information to Rama about this. Let banners and flags of various colours be

8. In obedience to the King's command, Sumantra in great joy enquired of the sage Vasishtha what he should do in this connection. Thereupon Vasishtha, the greatest among men of knowledge, replied to him: 9. "Tomorrow early morning, station at the main gate sixteen virgins adorned with ornaments of gold and an elephant also with decorations of gold studded with gems. 10. A four-tusked elephant of the breed of Airavata has to be got for this, besides numerous golden pots filled with the waters of holy rivers. 11. You must collect three fresh tiger skins. A ceremonial white umbrella with pearl pendants and a handle studded with gems is also required. 12. There should be kept ready fragrant garlands, costly garments and exquisite jewellery. Let holy men, well-honoured and holding Kusa grass in hand, be stationed at the proper place. 13. In the palace there must be assembled artistes of several kind, dancing girls, musicians, flutists, and experts in the use of various kinds of musical instruments. (14-16). Outside the palace regiments of elephants, horses and foot soldiers should stand attention with their arms. The Deities of all the temples in the city should be worshipped with ample offerings. Let vassal kings assemble with various articles of presentation." Having given these directions to the king's chief minister, Vasishtha himself went to the resplendent palace of Rama.

Vasishtha's Hymn (17-36)

17. Then proceeding to Rama's palace in a chariot, the great sage Vasishtha crossed three gates, and then got down from the chariot. (18-21). Being the family preceptor, he was allowed to enter the palace unobstructed. Seeing the preceptor coming, Rama immediately went to receive him with palms joined in salutation, and made a full prostration before him. Sita now brought water in a golden vessel, and seating Vasishtha on a bejewelled pedestal, washed his feet ceremonially. Then Rama, along with Sita, sprinkled that water on their heads, saying, "We are indeed blessed to bear your foot-washings on our head." To Rama who spoke thus the sage said smiling: 22. "Bearing the Ganga, which is the water flowing from Thy feet, on his head, Parameswara became great. That same sacred water destroyed all the demerits of my father, Brahmā. 23. What Thou hast said now about the washings of my feet purifying Thee, is only for the instruction of the world at large. For Thou, verily, art the Supreme Being and the Lord of all, incarnat-ed on earth along with Thy consort Lakshmi. 24. I know, O Rama, that Thou art born on earth for the achievement of certain purposes of the Devas, namely, the destruction of Ravana and for generating devotion in the minds of Thy votaries. (25-26). Though the facts are such, secrecy has to be maintained about the purpose of the Devas, so I am not revealing anything more prematurely. As Thou wishest to do things in Thy own mysterious way, let it happen in the fullness of time. I shall therefore continue to assume the pose of the preceptor, and Thou that of a disciple. But, O Lord, Thou art in truth the Teacher of all teachers, and the Progenitor of all fathers. (27-30). Though imperceptible to the senses, Thou art the inner pervader of all, and the One who regulates and sustains the progress of the world of Becoming. Thou who art born only out of Thy own accord, hast assumed a body of pure Sattva and hast appeared as man in the world by virtue of Thy Yoga-maya. I know that the profession of priesthood is disreputable. But having known earlier from the words of Brahma that the Supreme Being will be born as Rama in the line of the Ikshvakus, I have, O Rama, accepted even this ignoble profession of priesthood in order that I may be related to Thee as Thy preceptor. (31-32).

O Thou, the delight of Raghu's clan! My desire has now been fulfilled. I have now become Thy preceptor (Guru); and if Thou art inclined to pay back the debt that a disciple owes to the Guru, grant that Mahamaya, Thy Power, which is under Thy control and which deludes the whole world, may not delude me in that way.

33. In this particular context I have revealed in Thy presence what I should not do anywhere else. Now coming to my present visit, I have come, sent by King Dasaratha. (34-36). O descendant of Raghus! Tomorrow you are going to be installed as the Yuvaraja. (the heir-apparent). I have come to inform you of this. You and Sita are required to fast and observe rules of purity and self-control and spend the night sleeping on the floor. I am now returning to the King. You are to come there tomorrow morning." After having communicated this, the royal preceptor Vasishtha got into his chariot and drove away in great haste. And Rama, now seeing Lakshmana near by, said as follows, smiling: (37-38). Rama said: "O son of Sumitra! Did you hear the news that I am going to be installed as the Yuva-raja tomorrow? In this matter I shall be only just like a proxy. You will be the real ruler and the enjoyer. For, you are verily my Prana externally manifested. It is undoubtedly so." Saying so, he proceeded to fulfil all the vows that Vasishtha had instructed him to observe.

(39-40). Vasishtha on reaching Dasaratha, appraised him of all that had happened. Simultaneously with the King's announcement to Vasishtha about his intention to install Rama, the news was carried to Rama's mother Kausalya and to Sumitra, by some citizens who happened to hear about it. (41-43). Both Kausalya and Sumitra were overjoyed to hear this good news and made presentation of a pearl necklace to the man who communicated the news to them. In a spirit of thanksgiving Kausalya, the loving mother, adored Lakshmi Devi with great joy. Yet an apprehension gripped her mind. She anxiously thought: "It is certain that King Dasaratha, who is devoted to truth, will stick to the word that he has given. But he is uxorious by nature and is under the control of Kaikeyi. I am therefore afraid about what he will do in the end." With such apprehensions in mind, she adored Durga for the removal of all obstacles.

(44-46). In the meantime the Devas prompted Devi Saraswati, telling her "O Goddess of Speech! You must take the trouble of going to the earth, to the kingdom of Ayodhya. It is Brahma's command that you should strive to obstruct the installation of Rama. You have to possess Manthara first and then Kaikeyi and achieve this through them. After you have obstructed the coronation through them, you can return to your heavenly abode." Vani, the Goddess of Speech, did accordingly, and first entered into Manthara's heart and vocal organ.

(47-48). Now Manthara, who was a hunch-backed woman with three bents in the body, got on the terrace of a building in the morning, and was surprised to see the whole city decorated with flags and festoons and a holiday atmosphere prevailing everywhere. Astonished, she looked over the city, and then came down from the terrace.

(49-51). She then asked her foster-mother what it was all about. She enquired: "Mother, why is the city well decorated? I find Kausalya very joyous and enthusiastic, and she has been giving gifts of valuable cloth to many holy men. Why all this?"

To these 'queries' of hers, the foster-mother replied: "The installation of Rama as Yuva-raja is fixed for tomorrow. The city is decorated to celebrate that occasion." Hearing this, Manthara, the hunch-back, went to Kaikeyi and said to her as follows: (52-57). Addressing handsome Kaikeyi who was resting alone on a cot in a room, Manthara said: "You unfortunate and foolish woman! Why are you thus lying idle in this way when great danger is near at hand for you? You are going about proud of your beauty, but you are absolutely out of touch with the state of affairs round about you. By the King's gracious order, Rama's installation as the Yuvaraja will be taking place tomorrow." Hearing this news, Kaikeyi of sweet speech got up from the cot suddenly and gave to that hunch-back a golden waist-girdle as present, remarking, "How is it that you are saying that danger awaits me on an occasion like this, which is one of great joy for me? I hold Rama in greater esteem than my Bharata. He does and speaks what is dear to me. Looking upon me and Kausalya alike, he serves me in all respects. Foolish girl! What danger do you expect from Rama?" That hunch-backed woman, who had become antagonistic to Rama because of the prompting by Saraswati, was very sorry to hear these words of Kaikeyi. (58-59). She said to Kaikeyi: "O good lady! Hear my words. Truly there is great danger threatening you. King Dasaratha is supposed to be doing what is pleasing to you. But beware! He is only a sensual lover given to untruth. He is always pleasing you by words, but in action he is only doing what is wholly beneficial to Rama's mother, Kausalya. 60. It is with this in mind that he has sent away your son Bharata from here under the pretext of sending him to his uncle's house along with his brother. 61. Good will happen to Sumitra even if Rama's installation takes place. For, her son Lakshmana is devoted to Rama, and therefore he will enjoy royal favours when

Rama comes to power. 62. One of these three alternatives will happen to Bharata if Rama comes to power. He may have to become a servant of Rama, or he may be expelled from the country, or he may be executed very soon. 63. And as for you, you will have to serve Kausalya as her maid-servant all your life. Death is better for you than such humiliation at the hands of a co-wife. 64. Therefore take steps at once to see that Bharata is installed and Rama is banished to the forest for fourteen years. 65. O Queen! Then only can your son Bharata be free from all danger. There is a sure means for accomplishing this—a means for which past circumstances have paved the way. I shall now tell you what it is. (66-69). In days of old, King Dasaratha was requested by Devas to help them in a battle with the Asuras. When Dasaratha went on this mission with his army, he had taken you also with him, O handsome one. While he was fighting with the Asuras bow in hand, the king-pin of his chariot axle broke! You, handsome lady, then kept the chariot on wheels by putting your hand in the hole of the broken king-pin with great heroism. Because of your anxiety to save your husband's life, you remained with your hand in that position till the end of the battle. It was only when the battle was over and he had destroyed all the Asuras, that King Dasaratha saw what you had done. (70-73). Embracing you with great joy and wonder, he asked you to choose any two boons of your liking. 'I am pleased to grant you boons,' he said of his own accord, 'you ask of me for any two boons of your choice.' You replied: 'O royal husband! If you are pleased to bestow boons on me, let those boons rest with yourself to my credit for the time being. When I am in need of them, you can grant me the two boons.' 'Be it so, dear wife,' said the King in reply, 'let us now go to our camp.' This incident, which you had once narrated to me, has just now flashed in to my memory.

(74-75). In pursuance of this, you now enter into the Chamber of Annoyance (Krodhāgaram) without delay. Scatter all your jewellery there and lie on the bare floor in order to express your anger. Until the King comes and promises to fulfil your demands, utter not a word."

76. Being thrown into a perverse way of thinking by the evil company of Manthara, the hunch-backed woman with three bents, Kaikeyi got convinced that the advice given to her by that woman was on right lines. 77. And evil-minded Kaikeyi next said to her, "O you hunch-backed beauty! Where did you get this intelligence from? I never knew that you have such a resourceful mind. 78. Dear as you are to my heart, I shall make you a gift of a hundred villages when my beloved son Bharata becomes the ruler." (79-82). With these words she quickly entered the 'chamber for angry protest' in a mood of violent temper, and scattering all her jewellery round about, stretched herself on the bare floor, with her body smeared with dirt and covered over only with a soiled piece of cloth. And she said to Manthara: "Hear me, O hunch-backed one! Until Rama is exiled to the forest, I shall certainly lie here in this condition. If he is not exiled, I am going to end my life here." "Stick to your resolution, O dear one. That will be for your good." Saying so, the hunch-backed woman went home, and Kaikeyi did exactly as she was advised by her.

OBSTRUCTION OF RAMA'S INSTALLATION

Kaikeyi in the 'Chamber of Angry Protest' (1-14)

1. King Dasaratha now called all his ministers and leading noble men and ordered them to make all arrangements for the installation of Rama as Yuvaraja. After that he went to his quarters in the palace. (2-4). On entering his quarters, he was shocked to notice the absence of his dear wife Kaikeyi and thought: "When I return to the palace, my handsome and dear wife usually approaches me smiling. Why is it that today I do not see her at all here?" Thinking like this within himself, he asked the group of attending maids there: "Why is it that your mistress, my most handsome and dear wife, has not come to receive me as usual?" 5. They replied: "She has shut herself up in the 'chamber of angry protest!' We do not know why she has done so. It is better that Your Majesty is pleased to go in and ascertain the reason."

6. Stunned to hear this news, the King entered the room, and sitting by the side of Kaikeyi and stroking her body, said to her: 7. "Dear one! Why is it that, abandoning cots and other furniture, you are lying on the bare floor? Why is it that you are not talking to me? I am extremely distressed by this conduct of yours, O timid one!

8. Abandoning all your jewellery, and wearing only a soiled cloth, why are you lying on this bare floor? Tell me what is the cause of your dissatisfaction, and I shall fulfil all your demands. 9. Whoever it be that has caused you distress, whether it is man or woman, I am ready to inflict on that person punishment, including capital sentence. 10. Dear one! Whatever it be that you are longing for, appraise me of it, and I shall accomplish it in no time, however difficult it might be. 11. You know me to the core—that I am your dear husband completely under your control. When I am thus ever ready to fulfil your desires, it is needless for you to put yourself to all this trouble. 12. If you want a person dear to you to be enriched, I am ready to enrich him. If you want one inimical to you to be impoverished, I am ready to accomplish that also in no time. 13. Tell me whether you want any one to be executed. That shall certainly be done. Tell me whose sentence of execution you want to be revoked, that too shall be done. Why talk too much? O dear one! I am willing to offer even my life for your sake. 14. I swear by the lotus-eyed Rama, who is dearer to me than my life itself, that I shall do whatever would give you satisfaction. Tell me what you want and I shall certainly accomplish it."

Kaikeyi's Request for Two Boons (15-22)

(15-17). To him who was speaking thus, swearing by Rama, Kaikeyi replied, after rubbing away the tears from her eyes. She said, "If you are truthful, if you are going to fulfil what you have sworn by, then you are bound to carry out my request immediately. In days of old, when you took part in a battle between the Devas and the Asuras, I happened to save your life in a critical situation. Being highly pleased with me for it, you offered me two boons. (18-19). O truthful one! Those two boons which you then offered are still unfulfilled and are in your safe custody. Of those, one boon that I want now is that my dear son Bharata be immediately installed as Yuvaraja, utilising all these arrangements you have made for Rama's installation. The second boon I want is that Rama should be immediately sent into exile to the forest of Dandaka. (20-21). Let Sri Rama, dressed in an ascetic's garb of tree-bark, wearing matted locks, and devoid of all ornaments, live in the forest, subsisting on roots and fruits, for fourteen years. At the end of that period, let him return to the country or stay on in the forest itself if he prefers to do so. The lotus-eyed Rama should depart to the forest by the next sunrise. 22. If there is any delay in carrying out my wish in these respects, I will put an end to my life in your very presence. Be true to your words. This is what I wish to be done."

King Dasaratha in Distress (23-32)

23. Hearing these shocking and frightening words of Kaikeyi, King Dasaratha fell on the floor, like a mountain struck by the thunderbolt weapon of Indra. (24-25). Slowly opening his eyes and rubbing them with his hands, Dasaratha, who was full of fear, felt confused. Was he experiencing an evil dream or had he lost his mind? Looking at his wife Kaikeyi, who was standing in front like a tigress, he said, "Dear one, how is it that you are speaking words that will virtually take my life away? 26. What harm has the lotus-eyed Rama done to you? You have in the past been always speaking to me about the numerous virtues of Rama. 27. You, who have said in the past that Rama looks on you and Kausalya alike, and that he is always serving you—how is it that you speak now in this strain against him? 28. Let the kingdom go to your son, but let Rama stay on in the palace. Be pleased to favour me by accepting this proposal. What harm could you possibly have from Rama?" 29. With these words and weeping, he fell at the feet of Kaikeyi; but she with her eyes red with anger said as follows in reply:

30. "O great King! Have you become mad? You are now speaking contrary to what you have spoken a moment before. If you prove false to your words, hell will be your fate. 31. If Rama fails to go next morning to the forest, dressed in deer skin and tree-bark, I will be committing suicide in your very presence by hanging with a rope round my neck or by taking poison. 32. In all assemblies in this world you are proclaimed as one true to your plighted words; and now after swearing in the name of Rama himself, if you fail to do according to your promise, you are sure to be consigned to hell."

Rama Summoned to Dasaratha's Presence (33-49)

33. Hearing these words of his wife, the hapless king, immersed in the ocean of sorrow, fell unconscious on the floor like one dead. 34. On account of sorrow, he spent that night as if it were one year. When it was sunrise, the bards and the panegyrists began their recitals to the accompaniment of instrumental music to awaken the king. (35-37). But on Kaikeyi's order, these artistes had to stop their music and recitals. Kaikeyi stood there in a very angry mood. When it was daybreak, there assembled at the central gate all who had been ordered to do so by Vasishtha— citizens of the four classes, maidens, those holding superb ceremonial umbrellas and chowris, elephants and horses, dancing girls, and the general residents of the city and the villages. (38-41) All the citizens, men and women and children of the place, had no sleep that night. In great expectation, they were waiting for the morning when they could see, after the installation, the blue-complexioned and Cupid-like Rama dressed in yellow silk, decorated with jewellery, and adorned with a crown and shining armlets and the jewel Kaustubha, riding on an elephant along with Lakshmana under the cover of a ceremonial white umbrella. 42. Seeing that the king had not yet awakened from sleep, the Minister Sumantra hurried to the palace where he was living. 43. On greeting the king with good wishes and prostrations, Sumantra noticed him extremely grief-stricken. He addressed Kaikeyi as follows: (44-45). Sumantra said: "O honoured lady! May you be prosperous. How is it that I see the King with a sorrow-stricken face?" Kaikeyi replied, "The King had no sleep during the whole night. Uttering the name of Rama, he has been thinking of him alone. For want of sleep, you find him in this distressed condition. You bring Rama to this place quickly. The King desires to meet him."

(46-49). Sumantra said, "O lady! Without a word from the King, how can I go and bring Rama?" Hearing these words of the Minister, King Dasaratha said to him, "O Sumantra! I wish to see Rama. Bring him here quickly." Being so commanded, Sumantra went to Rama's palace in great haste. Without being detained anywhere, he met Rama quickly and said, "O lotus-eyed Rama! Please come with me to your father's palace immediately. May good befall you!" Saying so, he ascended his chariot together with Rama and Lakshmana and departed immediately in an agitated mood.

Kaikeyi Demands Rama's Exile (50-66)

(50-52). Reaching the middle gate of the palace, along with Lakshmana and his charioteer, Rama saw there Vasishtha and all others assembled. In great haste, he proceeded to his father's presence and prostrated himself before him. The King then got up and with great affection proceeded to embrace Rama. But as he lifted his hand for the purpose, he fell down calling the name of Rama in an extremely distressed voice. Surprised at this, Rama immediately supported him, embraced him and stretched him in his own lap. 53. Seeing the King unconscious, all the women there cried out in great agony. In order to ascertain the reason for these cries, sage Vasishtha also came into the palace.

54. Now Rama enquired of the persons present there, the cause of his father's sorrow. On his questioning thus, Kaikeyi said to him: 55. "You alone, O Rama, can relieve the King of his sorrow. There is one thing which you have to do to bring him relief. (56-57). May you, who are yourself truthful, help the King to fulfil his plighted words. Once, highly pleased with me, the King had given me two boons. The fulfilment of these is in your hands. The King is hesitant to speak to you about it. Bound as he is by the cord of vow of truthfulness, he has to be saved from this difficult predicament by you. (58-62). For, the word son (Putra) means one who lifts his father from hell." Hearing her words, Rama felt agony like one struck with a trident and he said to Kaikeyi, "There is no need to speak to me in this strain. I am one who is ready to give up my very life for the sake of my father. If necessary, I am ready to give up Sita or Kausalya or the kingdom. The right type of son is the one who fulfils a father's desire even without being asked to do so. The middling type is the one who does so, when requested. And the degenerate one is the son who fails to do so even when asked. Such a son is designated as 'dirt'. So, whatever my father wants me to do, I am prepared to obey. I swear that I shall do accordingly. Rama never indulges in double-talk." (63-66). Hearing this vow of Rama, Kaikeyi began to tell him: "O Rama! Whatever preparations have been made for your installation, all that must be utilised without fail for installing my dear son Bharata as the Yuvaraja. This is one of the boons that I have sought. The other is that at the command of your father, you should, wearing tree-bark and matted locks, go to the forest at once and live there for fourteen years subsisting on the diet of ascetics. These are what your father wants you to do. O scion of Raghu's line! The King is rather ashamed and hesitant to speak to you openly about it."

Rama's Reaction to the Demands of Kaikeyi (67-80)

67. Thus addressed, Rama said, "Let the kingdom go to Bharata and I shall go to the Dandaka forest. But I do not understand why the King is not so ordering me directly while I am standing in his presence."

68. Hearing these words of Rama, standing in front of him, the sorrow-stricken King Dasaratha spoke very mournfully. (69-70). He said, "You take possession of this kingdom, killing or imprisoning me, who am treading the path of injustice, whose mind has lost its balance and who is under the domination of a woman. It will not be sinful of you to do so. If you do like that, O joy of the Raghus, I shall not be tainted with the stain of untruth." Saying so, the grief-stricken King began to cry aloud, exclaiming: 71. "O Rama! O master of the world! O dearest object of my love! Abandoning me, how will it be possible for you to go to that dense forest!" (72-74). With these words the King embraced Rama and began to weep without any restraint. And, alas! Rama taking some water in his hand from a pot, washed the King's eyes, and the adept in conciliation that he was, he began to console the King saying, "O wise one! Why should you be so down-hearted in this situation? Let my brother rule the kingdom, and as for myself, after fulfilling your plighted words, I shall come back to this city. O King! I shall be a hundred times more happy to live in the forest than to rule the kingdom. 75. O great King! By this arrangement your promise will be fulfilled, and Kaikeyi too will be pleased. Thus my departure to the forest will prove highly beneficial. 76. I would, therefore, go away now from here. May the pangs of mother Kaikeyi's heart be assuaged thereby! Let all the materials brought for the installation be abandoned. 77. I shall now go and console my mother Kausalya and my wife Sita, the daughter of Janaka. After that I shall again come, do obeisance to you, and then depart to the forest with a peaceful mind."

(78-79). Saying so, Rama circumambulated his father and then went to see his mother Kausalya. At that time Kausalya, after having worshipped Hari for the welfare of Rama, had performed Homas and given gifts to holy men, and was observing silence and meditating in her palace with a concentrated mind. 80. She did not notice Rama standing in front of her, as she was then intently meditating in her heart on Mahavishnu, the one Being who dwells in all, who is ever resplendent with the light of knowledge, who transcends all diversities and whose nature is constituted of Bliss.

Chapter 4

RAMA'S EXILE TO THE FOREST

Rama informing Kausalya of his Father's Order (1-13)

1. Seeing Rama thus standing without being noticed, Sumitra hurried to inform Queen Kausalya of Rama's presence before her.
2. When the name of Rama was uttered, Kausalya opened her eyes, and she saw before her Rama of attractive eyes. She embraced him and seated him on her lap.
3. Smelling the crown of his head and stroking his body resembling a blue lily, she said, "O child! You should take food to your satisfaction. You look like one starved."
4. Rama said in reply, "There is no time for me to take food. I am to start immediately for the forest of Dandaka.
5. My father, who ever sticks to truth, has given two boons to Kaikeyi, according to which he has assigned the kingdom to Bharata, and to me the glorious forest.

6. After spending fourteen years there as an ascetic, I shall return without delay. Please be not worried on account of this."

7. Hearing these words, Kausalya fell down unconscious with a broken heart. Later, after coming to consciousness, she got up and, distressed by unbearable grief, nay, immersed in the ocean of sorrow, she said to Rama: 8. "O Rama! If it is true that you are going to the forest, take me also with you. Without you, how can I live even for a moment? 9. A cow cannot rest if its calf is taken away. Even like that, without you, my son, who is dearer to me than my life itself, how can I sustain my life? 10. If the King is so pleased, let him give the kingdom to Bharata. Why should he order you, my dear son, to go to the forest ? 11. Let the King, who has granted boons to Kaikeyi, give her all his possessions, but what harm have you done either to Kaikeyi or to the King to be expelled to the forest? 12. O Rama! Just as your father is your respectable elder, much more so am I, your mother. If the father has ordered you to go to the forest, I, your mother, am prohibiting it. 13. If, disobeying my words, you depart to the forest in obedience to the King's order, I shall abandon my life and attain the realm of Death."

Rama's Advice to Lakshmana (14-37)

14. Hearing Kausalya's words, Lakshmana who was burning with anger, as if he were going to burn the whole world, looked at Rama and said: 15. "I shall put in fetters the King who is under infatuation, who is of unsteady mind, and who is entirely under the thumb of Kaikeyi. I shall then kill Bharata and his uncle and other relatives.

16. Let Bharata and others now witness my prowess—the prowess by which I consume the whole universe in the fire of destruction. You should now, in every way, persist in this ceremony of installation. 17. With bow in hand, I shall cause the destruction of all who dare to obstruct your installation." Embracing the son of Sumitra, who was speaking thus, Rama said: 18. "O heroic scion of Raghu's line! You are indeed powerful and courageous. You are also well-intentioned towards me. I accept all this. But this is not the time for exhibiting your prowess. 19. If this kingdom and all that we experience, including our bodies, were true in the ultimate sense, then it would have been proper for you to make an effort on the lines proposed by you. 20. Enjoyments are momentary like streaks of lightning appearing in the clouds. So also is life—it is like a small drop of water sprinkled on a red hot piece of iron. 21. For men in the grip of the serpent of Time, to long for these extremely temporary enjoyments is like what it is for a frog to cry for food when it is already in the mouth of a serpent.

22. Man struggles day and night in various kinds of work for securing objects of enjoyment for his body. But, the truth is that the body is different from the true Self. 23. For all creatures, extremely temporary is the association with their kith and kin like father, mother, sons, brother, wife and others. It is only like the association that the traveller has in a way-side inn or even like pieces of wood floating down a river. 24. Fortune is unstable like a shadow. So is youth, like a wave in a water receptacle. Sexual enjoyments are dream-like and unsubstantial. Life, after all, is of very short duration. Yet, strangely enough all living beings run after these values as the be-all and end-all of life.

25. This transmigratory life resembles a dream. It is full of sufferings arising from diseases. It is as evanescent as a castle in the air, but yet foolish man goes after it.

26. Sunset and sunrise mark the ebbing away of life. We see all around others succumbing to old age and death. But still, man does not realise that this is his fate also.

27. Without realising that every day and every night that he is now enjoying, mark the termination of those that have gone before, the foolish and unreflective man blindly runs after enjoyments. He does not realise the rapidity with which Time rolls on. 28. The contents of our life-span are like water kept in an unbaked pot. It leaks out and is exhausted every moment. Like enemies, many kinds of diseases are ever ready to attack and destroy the body. 29. Old age and disease are ever assailing the body, and in their wake death too is watching for the opportune moment to pounce upon man like a tigress. 30. In this world you find that man thinks of his own body as 'I'—of this body which is only a synonym for worms, dirt and ashes.

like this body. he feels that he is a world-renowned king. 31. How can this body be the spirit (Atman)—this body which is nothing but a combination of skin, bones, excreta, semen, blood etc.? It is extremely changeful also. How can such a body be identified with the Atman? 32. O Lakshmana! This body for the love of which you say you are going to destroy the world—this identification with the body is the cause of all evil. 33. The conviction that 'I am the body' is what is called Avidya (ignorance). The conviction that 'I am not the body but the light of Consciousness,' is called Vidya (knowledge). 34. Avidya is the cause of transmigratory life, and the eradication of it is accomplished by Vidya. Therefore, all who aspire for liberation should ever cultivate Vidya. In the cultivation of Vidya, the chief obstructing factors are passions like lust and anger. 35. Of all these, anger is the greatest obstruction. For, overcome by anger, man murders even his father, brother, well-wishers and friends. 36. From anger arises distress in mind. Anger keeps one tightly tied to the transmigratory life. Anger effaces a man's righteous tendencies. Therefore, anger is to be abandoned by all means. 37. Anger is man's most terrible enemy. Desires and longings of the heart constitute the Vaitarani—the river of hell difficult to cross. Contentment is Nandanavana, the forest of Nandana—the garden of heaven. Peace at heart is verily Kamadhenu—the heavenly cow of plenty.

Control your Mind and be Calm (38-47)

(38-41). Therefore practise calmness of mind. Thereby you can avoid having enemies. The Atman is distinct from the senses, mind, Prana, Buddhi and other categories. Pure and changeless, the Atman is the universal self-conscious intelligence shining without the help of any other entity (svayamjyoti). As long as one does not realise the distinctiveness of the Atman from the body, the senses and the Prana, so long will one be subject to the sufferings of transmigratory life, including death. Therefore, ever think of the Atman as residing in the heart in complete separation from the body-mind complex. While knowing the Atman thus, follow the ways of the world at the same time. Do not feel distressed. Enjoyments and sufferings befall man according to his operative Karma (prarabha). 42. Though coursing along the flow of worldly life and appearing to be the agent of various actions, one who knows the real Self is never bound by the good and evil fruits of actions. 43. Being pure and unaffected within, one is not affected by Karmas. Always remember these instructions. 44. Thus you will never fall a victim to the sufferings of Samsara; and you, too, O mother, keep in your mind all these truths that I have spoken to Lakshmana. 45. You wait for my return. Your sorrows will not last very long. Living beings who are subject to their Karma cannot always live in the same situation, as different environments are required for the experience of the fruits of their Karmas. So it is not given to them to live always with the same people in the same place. They have to part according to the quanta of Karma coming to fruition. 46. Men subject to Karma are like boats caught in a current of water. They go in different directions according to the speed and direction of the water. And, after all, fourteen years will pass away like a moment. 47. O mother! Abandon grief and permit me to go. If you do so, I shall be able to live in the forest in peace."

Rama Reconciles Kausalya, Lakshmana and Sita to his Resolution (48-51)

48. Saying so, Rama lay flat at his mother's feet in prostration for a long time. Mother Kausalya lifted him up, seated him in her lap, and pronounced blessings on him. (49-51). After embracing him again and again, she permitted him to go with the following blessings: "May all the Devas along with Gandharvas—may the deities Brahma, Vishnu and Maheswara protect you wherever you go, wherever you travel, wherever you stay and wherever you sleep!" Thereupon Lakshmana, saluting Rama, said with his throat choked with feelings: "O Rama! You have now cleared the doubt that was in my mind. Now may you be pleased to permit me to follow you and serve you. Be pleased to order so. 52. O Rama! Bestow this blessing on me. If you do not, I shall give up my life." Rama, accepting Lakshmana's request, said to him, "Then be ready to start. Do not delay."

(53-56). Rama, who was none but the Lord of the universe, now went to console his wife Sita. Seeing her husband arrive, Sita received him with a smile and sweet words. She washed his feet with water kept in a golden vessel, and looking at him said, "O Lord, how is it that you have come without your body guard? Where have you been till now? Where is that ceremonial white umbrella that used to be held over you? How is it that musical instruments are not being played as you move about? Why is it that you have come without your crown and other royal insignia, and how is it again that you are not accompanied by any of the vassal princes?" Being thus questioned by Sita, Rama answered with a smile.

57. He said, "O handsome one! The King has assigned to me the kingdom of Dandakaranya. I am therefore proceeding quickly for ruling over it. 58. I am starting for the forest even today. You therefore stay with my father and mother, serving the mother specially. I am not telling this in joke, but seriously." 59. Overwhelmed by surprise and fear on hearing Sri Rama's words, Sita asked him why the noble-minded father had commanded him to go to the forest. 60. Rama thereupon said to her: "Being highly pleased with Kaikeyi, the King had given her two boons. According to that he has assigned the kingdom to Bharata and the forest to me. 61. Kaikeyi wanted that I should be an exile in the forest for fourteen years. The King, though really very kind to me, has yet, being a strict adherent of truth, assigned the forest to me. (62-63). I am therefore in a hurry to depart. O noble lady! Cause no obstructions to my plan." Hearing these words of Rama, Sita spoke to him with great joy. She said: "I will be the first to go to the forest. You shall only follow me. O scion of Raghu's line! It is not befitting that you go without me."

64. Though highly pleased with the attitude of his wife, Rama none the less said to her, "How can I take you, to the forest, which is full of tigers and other wild animals? 65. The forest abounds also in terrible-looking Rakshasas who eat human beings. Everywhere, the forest is infested with wild animals like lions, tigers and wild boars. 66. O handsome one! One will have to subsist there on roots and fruits that may be pungent and sour. Well prepared dishes and tasty edibles can never be had there. 67. Even fruits may not be available when one wants them. The forest tracts are almost invisible. They are full of stones and thorns. 68. The forest of Dandaka is characterised by many forbidding features like caves and caverns and the humming of stinging insects. 69. There one has to walk on bare feet. There will be shivering cold and heat alternating, besides terrible winds. Frightened by the sight of the Rakshasas in the forest, you may even die.

(70-74). "Therefore, O handsome one, you stay back at this palace until my return." Hearing these words of Rama, Sita, sorrow-stricken and red in her face with a tinge of indignation, replied: "I am a wedded wife, blemishless, vowed to faithfulness to you and solely dependent on you. How can I ever think of staying away from you? You know all Dharma and you are inherently kind. Who in the forest will dare to injure me while I am staying with you? The remnants of fruits and roots that you have eaten will taste like nectar itself to me. I shall live highly satisfied with that food. For me following you, the forest lands, full of grass, thorny shrubs and stones, will be like a place spread with beds of flowers. I have no doubts about it. (75-76). I shall give you no trouble in any way. On the other hand, I shall always be helpful. In my girlhood, a great astrologer, on seeing me, had predicted that I would have to live with my husband in a forest. May that scholar's words come true! I shall certainly go with you. (77-78). I shall tell you one thing more, and hearing that, please decide to take me into the forest. I have heard the various versions of the Rama-saga (Ramayana), recited by many scholars. In which of these, do you find Rama going to the forest without Sita? In none, to be sure. Therefore, I have to go with you. In every way, I shall only be helpful to you. (79-82). If you decide to go without me, I shall abandon my life in your very presence."

Hearing these determined words of Sita, Rama said to her: "O Lady! Then be ready quickly to start with me to the forest. Your necklaces and other jewellery may be given over to our preceptor's wife, Arundhati. We shall go to the forest after giving all our wealth as gift to holy men." Saying so, he asked Lakshmana to gather together a large number of pious Brahmanas, and he gave them as gift several hundreds of cows and valuable pieces of cloth and ornaments. They were all adepts in Vedas, of noble conduct and householders with families. 83. Sita gave away all her important ornaments to Arundhati, while Rama gave much wealth as present to the attendants of his mother. 84. Thus Rama gave numerous gifts to the residents of the palace, to his servants, to the residents of the city and villages and to many holy men. 85. And as for Laksh-

Then Rama, Sita and Lakshmana went to the king's palace. 87. Rama of blue complexion, who was more handsome than a hundred cupids, whose radiance illumined all the quarters, and whose foot-steps sanctified the three worlds, now went with Sita and Lakshmana leisurely on foot to his father's mansion, looking joyfully at the large crowd of the inhabitants of the city and villages that had gathered on the highway for the installation ceremony.

RAMA'S DEPARTURE TO THE FOREST

The Reaction of the Citizens (1-9)

1. Seeing Rama coming along the public road with Lakshmana and Sita, the daughter of Janaka, all the citizens in the neighbourhood began to look at each other and remark about it among themselves. (2-4). Steeped in sorrow on hearing about the boon given to Kaikeyi, these citizens said: "Alas! On account of a woman's instigation, King Dasaratha has sacrificed a son so virtuous and truthful. The King is highly uxorious. How can such a person be given credit for being truthful? How has this Kaikeyi become so cruel-hearted? How could she think of getting expelled from the country a prince like Rama so truthful and beneficent to all? She must indeed be an extremely stupid and heartless woman. O fellow citizens! A country like this, where such injustice and cruelty are perpetrated, is unfit for us to stay in any longer. Let us also go to the forest even today. 5. We shall go where Rama is going with his wife and brother. See how Sita the daughter of Janaka is walking bare-footed along the road! 6. Sita, a beauty without a peer anywhere in the world, was hitherto living in seclusion without being seen by any man outside the circle of her kith and kin. But see how she is walking bare-footed along the crowded public road without even a veil covering her face! 7. Rama too is going on foot without any horse or elephant as a mount. See, there goes our noble Lord, the most handsome person in the whole world! 8. That Rakshasi of a Kaikeyi will cause total ruin. Rama's heart must surely be wrenched by grief to see Sita trudging along the road. 9. This is indeed a stroke of destiny against which all human effort is of no avail."

Vamadeva on Rama's spiritual Identity (10-31)

10. When all good men were thus mourning, the great sage Vamadeva, who was amidst them, came forward to comfort them. He said to them: "Do not be downcast with sorrow, thinking either of Rama or Sita. Listen to what I say regarding the truth about them. (11-12). This Rama is none but the Supreme Being—Mahavishnu Adi-Narayana. This Sita, the daughter of Janaka, is Mahalakshmi, famous as the Yogamaya of Vishnu. The one whom you know as Lakshmana is Adisesha now following him. The Lord, uniting Himself with Maya, has taken these different forms. (13-17). It is He who, assuming the qualities of Rajas, has become Brahma, the creator. So also, assuming the quality of Sattva, He has become Mahavishnu, the protector of the worlds. In the end, assuming the quality of Tamas, He will be Rudra the cause of dissolution. In days of old, taking the form of a Fish, He enabled the devotee Vaivasvata Manu to get into a boat and get protection till the end of the great deluge. Again, when the Milk Ocean was churned and the churning rod Mandara mountain sank into the ocean up to Sutala, He, this leader of the Raghu's clan, assuming the form of a Tortoise, supported the mountain on His back. When at the time of Pralaya, the earth sank to the level of Rasatala, this noble one of Raghu's line took the shape of a Boar and lifted it out on His tusk. (18-23). In days of yore assuming the form of a Man-lion, He gave protection to Prahlada and tore open with his nails the chest of the demon Hiranyakasipu, the oppressor of all the worlds. When Aditi, the mother of the Devas, approached him to help her sons, the Devas, who had been deprived of their heavenly realm by Bali, He manifested himself in the form of a Dwarf, and through the tactics of begging, recovered that realm of the celestials. In order to relieve the earth of the burden of evil Kshatriyas, He incarnated Himself as Rama of Bhrigu's line. That same Lord of the universe has now incarnated as Rama. He will destroy Ravana and other Rakshasas in thousands. He has taken a human form because that evil Rakshasa Ravana can be killed only by the hands of a man. In a previous birth, King Dasaratha had adored Hari through austerities, desiring that He Himself should be born as a son to him. Rama is that Mahavishnu, now incarnated as man. In order to destroy Ravana and others, He will go even today to the forest accompanied by Lakshmana. This Sita is Maya, the power of Vishnu, who is the cause of creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe. (24-25). Neither Kaikeyi nor King Dasaratha is in the least responsible for all these developments. It was even yesterday that Narada prayed to Rama to be pleased to relieve the earth of its burdens, and Rama himself replied to him that he would go to the forest the very next day. Therefore, you ignorant people can abandon all grief on account of Rama. (26-27) In this world, whoever repeats the name of Rama constantly, is never overcome by fear of death and other calamities. That being the case, how can you ever suspect this Rama to be overcome by grief? (28-29). In order to bless the world, He is imitating the ways of man. For providing devotees with an object for centring their devotion and service, for bringing about the destruction of Ravana, and for fulfilling the prayer of King Dasaratha, He has assumed this human form." Saying so, the sage Vamadeva resumed silence.

30. Hearing these words of Vamadeva, all those pious men had the doubts of their heart dispelled and began to meditate on Rama as a Divine Being. 31. Whoever constantly contemplates on this esoteric teaching on Rama and Sita, will attain to firm devotion to Rama, accompanied by illumination. 32. "This secret doctrine is to be jealously guarded," said sage Vamadeva, "you are all very dear to Rama." Saying so, the sage departed, and the pious devotees recognised the identity of Rama with the Supreme Being.

Scenes at Rama's Departure (33-46)

33. Now Rama, along with Sita and Lakshmana went straight to the palace of his father, and said to Kaikeyi as follows: 34. "O mother! We three have come ready to go to any forest that you want us to go to. Let our father order us without delay." 35. Hearing these words of Rama, Kaikeyi got up at once and gave them three tree-bark garments that ascetics wear, one each for Rama, Lakshmana and Sita. (36-37.) Rama now abandoned his royal dress and put on the tree-bark. Lakshmana also followed suit. But Sita, not knowing how to wear a garment of that kind, stood puzzled, holding it in hand and looking at the face of Rama. Rama, thereupon took that piece of tree-bark and tied it over her dress. (38-39). Seeing this piteous scene, all the women in the palace began to cry aloud. The Preceptor Vasishtha, on hearing their cry, came into the palace. He grasped the situation and addressed Kaikeyi in a very angry mood. He said, "O wicked woman! According to the boon given to you, Rama alone is to go to the forest. Why are you then giving this ascetic's tree-bark dress to Sita? (40-43). If Sita, the chaste wife of Rama, prefers to follow him to the forest as a matter of duty, let her do so, always dressed in excellent clothes and bedecked with all ornaments. By accompanying him, she will be able to relieve Rama of much of his sufferings incidental to life in the forest."

Now King Dasaratha said, addressing his minister Sumantra, "These three, who are dear to the ascetics of the forest, should go from here only in a chariot." Saying so, he looked at Rama, Sita and Lakshmana, and immediately fell down on the earth crying aloud, overwhelmed by sorrow, and was almost drowned in his own tears. Now first Sita got into the chariot in the presence of Rama. (44-46). Circumambulating his father, Rama also got into the chariot and Lakshmana followed him, taking with him a pair each of sword, bow and quiver. When they directed their charioteer to proceed, King Dasaratha cried out, "O Sumantra! Stop, Stop." But Rama once again gave order to proceed and the charioteer started off. When they had moved out some distance, King Dasaratha fell unconscious on the floor.

47. Many citizens, including children, old men, pious Brahmanas and others ran after the chariot crying out, "O Rama! Stop, Stop." 48. After weeping for a long time, King Dasaratha asked his attendants to take him to the quarters of Kausalya, the mother of Rama. 49. He said, "If I am there in Kausalya's palace, the life of my sorrow-stricken self may last for a short time more. Separated from Rama, I am not going to live any longer." 50. Reaching Kausalya's palace, he again became unconscious and fell down. Recover-

(51-52) Reaching the banks of the river Tamasa, Rama stayed there happily for the night. Without taking any food excepting water from the river, he slept under a tree. Sita also did the same. And Lakshmana, who knew all Dharma, along with Sumantra kept guard with bow in hand. 53. The sorrow-stricken citizens too had followed Rama. They halted somewhere in the neighbourhood for the night with the resolution that either they would get back Rama to the city, or failing that, go with him to the forest. (54-56). Astonished at their determination, Rama said, "I cannot go back to the city and if these people come to the forest, they will be put to great difficulties." Accordingly he addressed Sumantra, "O Sumantra! Get the chariot ready. We shall get away from here even now, while these people are asleep." Sumantra, as ordered, yoked the horses to the chariot, and Rama, Sita and Lakshmana started in it in great haste. (57-58). The chariot was taken in the direction of Ayodhya for some distance and from there turned back to the forest. The citizens, waking up in the morning, were terribly grief-stricken to notice the absence of Rama there. They, however, tried to trace him, following the mark made by the chariot wheels. But that took them only back to the city. And so resigning themselves to their fate, they continued to stay in the city, constantly thinking of Rama and Sita.

(59-62). Sumantra now drove the chariot very fast. Moving through prosperous villages, Rama reached the banks of the Ganga where the Ashrama known as Sringavera was situated. Seeing the holy river Ganga and bathing in it, Rama was highly delighted to stay underneath a Simsapa tree. Now Guha, a local chieftain, knowing about the advent of Rama from his people, proceeded to meet him, who was both his friend and master. Carrying fruits, honey, flowers and the like in hand, he went quickly in a mood of high elation.

63. Offering all these things to Rama, he made a full prostration at his feet, stretching his whole body on the ground. Rama lifted him up immediately and embraced him.

64. After Rama had made kind enquiries of his welfare, Guha said to him with his palms joined in salutation: "O Thou, who art the sanctifier of the worlds! Today I am really fortunate and my birth in the tribe of hunters has come to its fulfilment.

(65-67). O the noblest among the Raghus! I have had the thrill of spiritual joy by contacting Thy body today. This country of the hunters belongs to me, Thy servant. Therefore these places are under Thy sovereignty. O noble scion of Raghu's line! Be pleased to stay on here and rule over us. Let us go to the town, and there be Thou pleased to sanctify my house by Thy presence after accepting this offering of all the fruits and roots that I collected for Thee—O venerable one! Be gracious and bless Thy servant."

(68-69). Rama, who was delighted with Guha, said to him, "O friend! Hear my words. For fourteen years, I shall not enter a village or a house, nor shall I eat fruits and roots offered by others. True it is that all this kingdom is mine. You are indeed dear to my heart."

70. Rama next had some sap of banyan tree brought, and with it he and Lakshmana had their hair matted and tied on their head like crowns. (71-72). That prince of Raghu's line, taking only water as his food, spent the night along with Sita on a bed of grass made for them by Lakshmana. On such beds, he and Sita slept as comfortably as they used to do on luxurious cots in the upper floor of the palace.

Chapter 6

RAMA ON HIS WAY TO CHITRAKUTA

Lakshmana's advice to Guha (1-15)

(1-2). After Rama had fallen asleep, Guha, looking at him with eyes brimming with tears, said to Lakshmana in all humility, "O brother! Don't you see this prince of Raghu's line, who has been accustomed to sleep only on golden cots with excellent mattresses, now lying on a bed of grass along with Sita! 3. It was destiny that made Kaikeyi bring about this sad condition for Rama. But this was done indirectly through Manthara, whose evil advice Kaikeyi accepted and so committed this sinful act."

A-6

4. Hearing this, Lakshmana replied, "O friend! Listen to me. In this world who is the cause of whose sorrow, and who is the cause of whose happiness too? 5. The cause of one's enjoyment and suffering is one's own actions (Karmas) of past lives. 6. There is none external to oneself causing one happiness and misery. It is a perverted intelligence that attributes these experiences as caused by another. It is vain pride that makes one think that 'I am doing' such an act. The world is strung, as it were, on the thread of one's own action. 7. In this world, men think of others as friends, relatives, enemies, neutrals etc. But the responsibility, for one's actions is entirely on oneself. We wrongly attribute them to the others mentioned. 8. Man, who is subject to his own Karma, should submit himself to the happiness and the misery that befall him as a result of his own Karma. He should remain unperturbed while experiencing these, the fruits of one's own actions. 9. Let him think, 'I have neither desire for Bhoga (enjoyments), nor do I avoid them. Let them come or let them go.' Thinking in this way, one should liberate oneself from enslavement to enjoyments. 10. The fruits of one's own good and evil actions, accruing from whomever or in whatever manner and in whatever place and time, have to be experienced then and there. There is no remedy against this. 11. One should not feel elated when happiness is experienced, nor depressed when misery overcomes one. What Destiny has accorded to one according to one's Karma cannot be overcome by anyone, be he a Deva or an Asura. 12. This body of ours, which is a product of our virtuous and sinful actions, is always subject to happiness and misery. The life of man is a bundle of such experiences. 13. Just as day and night follow each other irreversibly, so do men experience happiness now and after that misery, and after misery, happiness once again. 14. In the midst of happiness, misery can occur, and in the midst of misery, happiness too can occur. As water and mire are mixed together intimately, so are happiness and misery. 15. So, enlightened men, considering these favourable, and unfavourable experiences as Maya or mere appearances, remain unperturbed without yielding to elation or depression."

Parting with Guha (16-27)

16. As Guha and Lakshmana conversed in this way, a glimmer of light began to spread in the sky. It was now dawn, when Rama, getting up from sleep, bathed in the water of the river and performed his morning rites. (17-20). Next Rama said to Guha, "Get me a good boat." And Guha, the king of the hunters, accordingly brought a well-constructed boat, himself rowing it. He now said to Rama, "O Lord! Please get into the boat along with Sita and Lakshmana. I shall myself row it with perfect dexterity." Agreeing to the proposal, Rama helped Sita to embark and himself followed, holding the hands of Guha. Next Lakshmana put all the weapons in the boat and himself got into it. 21. As Guha rowed the boat along with his companions and the boat reached the middle of the Ganga, Sita prayed as follows to the river-goddess: 22. "O Goddess of Ganga! Salutations to Thee! After I return from forest life along with Rama and Lakshmana, I shall worship Thee. 23. With great devotion I shall adore Thee with plentiful offerings, including liquor and meat." Shortly after, they all reached the other shore.

(24-27). Guha now said to Rama, "O great king, I too shall go with you. Be pleased to give me permission for that. If you do not do so, I shall give up my life." Hearing these words of the hunter-chief, Sri Rama said to him, "After staying in the Dandaka forest for fourteen years, I shall be returning. What I say is true, Rama's words never prove untrue." With these words, he embraced the devotee, consoled him again and again, and managed to send him back, and Guha returned sorrowfully.

Rama at Bharadwaja's Ashrama (28-41)

28. In the forest nearby, Rama and Lakshmana hunted a permitted wild animal, cooked it, offered it, and took the meat for the day as meal. During the night, they peacefully slept under a tree. (29-30). In the morning, along with Sita and Lakshmana, Rama proceeded to the hermitage of Bharadwaja. In the neighbourhood of the hermitage, he saw a Brahmacharin, and accosting him, said, "Please inform your teacher, the sage, that Rama, the son of Dasaratha, is waiting at the fringe of the forest surrounding the hermitage." (31-32). The Brahmacharin thereupon went quickly into the hermitage and saluting the sage Bharadwaja, said, "O Master! Rama has come into the forest and is waiting outside in the neighbourhood of the Ashrama. He is accompanied by his wife and brother. He is a personage looking like a divinity. He asked me to inform you in the proper way about his arrival." 33. Hearing these words, the great sage Bharadwaja got up immediately from his seat and went towards Rama, carrying with him the ingredients for the offerings of Arghya and Padya. (34-36). After making salutation to Rama and Lakshmana, the sage said, "O Rama, lotus-eyed one! Please visit my hermitage and deign to consecrate it with the dust of Thy feet." With these words, he led him into the hermitage along with Sita and Lakshmana, again adored him and extended to him a reception according to the noblest traditions. 37. He then said, "By Thy advent, the austerities I have been practising have come to their fulfilment. I am acquainted, O Rama, with everything about Thee—Thy past and what Thou art going to do hereafter. I know Thee as the veritable Paramatman who has assumed a human form by His Maya. (38-39). By virtue of the insight I have gained by Thy adoration, I have come to understand how Thou wert prayed to by Brahma, how Thou hast incarnated Thyself, what the purpose of Thy residence in the forest is, and what Thou hast done while living in Ayodhya. What more am I to say? O the noblest one of Raghu's line! (40-41). I have come to my life's fulfilment by my contact with Thee. I am blessed by meeting Thee, who art the Purusha that transcends Prakriti, now incarnated in Kakutstha's line." Thereupon Rama, along with Sita and Lakshmana, saluted the sage and said, "O-great sage! We, who are mere Kshatriyas, beseech your blessings." Conversing in this way, they spent some time with the sage.

Rama at Valmiki's Ashrama (42-64)

(42-43). Next morning, after his bath and morning rites, the sage directed Rama to the banks of the Yamuna. Accompanied by some of the pupils of the sage, Rama crossed the Yamuna on his way to mount Chitrakuta, where the hermitage of sage Valmiki was situated. Soon, he reached that hermitage which was inhabited by a large number of sages. (44-45). That hermitage was full of animals and birds, and the trees there were laden with flowers and fruits. Meeting the sage Valmiki there, Rama, Lakshmana and Sita saluted him. (46-48). At the sight of Rama, the consort of Lakshmi and the most handsome one—of Rama who had a cupid-like form and attractive eyes of the shape of lotus petals, and who appeared now with a crown of matted locks on his head—the sage Valmiki got up from his seat in great haste. With eyes brimming with tears and unwinking due to amazement and with a heart overflowing with bliss, he embraced Rama and offered Arghya and Padya with great devotion to him who was the object of worship for the whole world. He then fed him with sweet fruits and roots.

(49-50). Saluting the sage Valmiki with humility, Rama said to him, "At the command of our father, we have come to this Dandakaranya. To you, who are capable of knowing everything, it is needless for me to give the reason for this. I request you to advise me as to where I can stay in peace in these regions. 51. At that place, I shall spend some length of time along with Sita." When Rama said this much, that sage spoke to him with a smile on his face. (52-53). "Thou art indeed the best residence for the whole world, while at the same time all beings in the universe form a fitting residence for Thee too. O Rama! Thou scion of Raghu's line! What I have pointed out is Thy common place of residence. Thou hast asked for a special residence where Thou couldst stay with Sita. O Thou, the noblest of Raghu's line! I shall now point it out. 54. The best residence for Thee is the heart of those who are peaceful, even-minded, friendly to all creatures and who ever adore Thee with great devotion. 55. Those who are ever dependent on Thee abandoning all Dharma and Adharma—their heart, O Rama, is the happiest residence for Thee along with Sita. 56. Those who ever repeat Thy name, those who are ever resigned to Thee, those who are above the pairs of opposites, those who are devoid of all desires—their heart is the happy residence for Thee. 57. Those who are without self-conceit, who are peaceful, who are devoid of attachment and anger, and who view a clod of earth and a piece of gold as equal—their heart is the fitting residence for Thee. 58. Those who have resigned their mind and intellect to Thee, those who are ever established in perfect contentment, those who have dedicated all their works to Thee—their hearts form the auspicious residence for Thee. 59. Those who do not show any revulsion to unpleasant experiences and do not get elated with pleasant ones, and those who look upon the whole universe as Maya, a mere appearance, and remain devoted to Thee alone—their heart forms a fitting residence for Thee. (60-61). Whosoever sees the six transformations of one's being beginning with birth as occurring to the body and not to the Self, whoever sees hunger, thirst and fear, as also happiness and misery as belonging to the Prana and not to the Atman, and whoever is by such knowledge free from involvement in the processes of Samsara—the heart of such a person forms a fitting residence for Thee. 62. Mayest Thou reside along with Sita in the heart-lotus of those who see Thee as the resident of the inner recess of all beings, who understand Thee as Pure Consciousness, as the Truth, as the Immeasurable, as the One without a second, as the One Unaffected, as the One all-pervading and as the One superior to everything else. 63. Those who have succeeded in concentrating their mind by continuous practice, those who are ever devoted to the service of Thy feet, those whose sins have been effaced by taking Thy name and singing about Thy glories—the heart-lotus of such persons is the fitting home for Thee to dwell with Sita.

Valmiki's previous History (64-92)

64. O Rama ! Who can describe adequately the greatness of Thy name—the name by the power of which I attained to the status of a Brahmarshi. 65. Long ago, I was living in the land of the hunters among a tribe of that community. A Brahmana by mere birth, I was given to the ways of the most ignoble people. 66. The sensual man that I was, I had a brood of children by a low-born woman, and for their support I associated myself with thieves and robbers and took to their profession as the means of livelihood. 67. Every day, equipped with bow and arrow, I moved about in the forest as death embodied, for the destruction of all living creatures. While doing so, I once saw seven Munis in a thick forest. (68-69) I saw them luminous like fire and the sun. Moved by greed, I desired to rob them of all their possessions, and for that purpose, I followed them and ordered them to stop. Seeing me, they addressed me thus, 'O degenerate fellow of a Brahmana ! Why are you following us?' 70. I replied, 'There are many hungry mouths in my house to feed. I am coming to rob you of your possessions to fulfil my needs. (71-74). For the support of my family I am moving about on mountains and in forests.' But in a very gentle tone, they told me, 'You go to your family members and ask every one of them individually, whether they are willing to share the sins that you are accumulating to your credit every day. Until you return after making this enquiry, we shall remain here itself.' I, therefore, went home and communicated to my wife and children what the sages had said. But their reply was that they were willing to share only my earnings and not my sins. 75. Their words drove me to a mood of tremendous repentance. I now hurried to the place where the merciful sages were awaiting my return. 76. My mind being purified by the sight of these holy men, I abandoned my weapons like bow and arrow, and fell flat before them in salutation. 77. I prayed to them, 'O great sages! Save me from the terrible hells I am destined to.' To me who was thus lying flat before them in prostration, the sages said: (78-79). 'Arise! Arise! You will be saved. The contact with holy men will certainly be fruitful. We shall give you some advice. By that you will attain salvation.' Then they had some consultation among themselves as follows: "He is certainly a man of evil ways. A Brahmana, who has degenerated by evil ways, has to be shunned by all good men. This is the law. Yet, he has taken shelter under us and as such, even though it may be difficult, he has to be helped with proper advice for the attainment of spiritual salvation." 80. With these words, O Rama, they initiated me into Thy name in the reverse order as 'Mara' and asked me to repeat it continuously there · itself with concentration of mind. 81. 'Until we return to this place again,' said they, 'you go on repeating the name with which we have initiated you.' With this instruction, those holy and divine-looking sages departed.

82. "I immediately started to put their advice into practice in all sincerity. I repeated the name with such concentration that I lost awareness of all external things. 83. Devoid of all worldly attachments, I went on with this practice for a long time without moving the body in the least, and as a consequence an ant-hill (Valmika) gathered about me and rose above my head. 84. At the end of a thousand divine years, those holy sages who instructed me returned to me, who was sitting covered by that ant-hill. Seeing me in that condition they called out to me to come out. I then arose from my seat at once. (85-86). As the sun emerges from the clouds, I got out of the mould of earth. The sages thereupon said. ‘This emergence from a mould of earth is a second birth for you. O sage! You will hereafter be known as Valmiki—one born out of Valmika or ant-hill. Saying so, they departed to the heavenly regions. (87-88). O the noblest of Raghu’s line! By the power of Thy name ‘Rama’, I have attained to this state of life. Now, I have the privilege of seeing Thee with Sita and Lakshmana with my mortal eyes. I have thereby certainly become liberated. Come, O Rama! May everything good befall Thee. I shall show a place suitable for Thee to stay.’

(89-90). Saying so, the sage Valmiki, along with Rama, Lakshmana and some of his own disciples went to a region between the Ganga and the Chitrakuta mountain. There, an extensive plot was located, and Rama, whose real residence is the whole world, had two spacious thatched constructions made, one extending from east to west and the other south to north. 91. Like divine beings, Rama, Sita and Lakshmana took their residence in those abodes. 92. Adored by sage Valmiki, Rama along with Sita and Lakshmana, resided there in joy just as Indra resides in heaven in the company of Sachi and great sages.

KING DASARATHA'S DEMISE

Sumantra's return and after (1-19)

(1-2). Now Sumantra had returned to Ayodhya by evening. He covered his face with a cloth to hide the tears flowing from his eyes. Stationing the chariot outside, he went to the palace to see King Dasaratha. He greeted the King respectfully and made prostrations to him. (3-4). To Sumantra, who was thus waiting before him, King Dasaratha, said, distracted with grief, "O Sumantra! Where is Rama staying along with Sita and Lakshmana? Where did you leave him? What did he, Sita and Lakshmana ask you to report to me, a hard-hearted sinner? 5. O virtuous Rama! O dear Sita! Don't you see me almost dying, submerged in an ocean of sorrow!" 6. He bemoaned like this for a long time, completely overpowered by sorrow. To him, piteously crying like this, the Minister said, 7. "I took Rama, Sita and Lakshmana in your chariot up to the banks of the Ganges where the city of Srингivera stands. 8. There, Guha presented him with fruits and roots. With great joy, Rama accepted them, touching them with his hands, but did not eat anything. (9-10). That great prince of Raghu's line asked Guha to fetch him some sap of the banyan tree. With that he matted his hair as a crown on his head. Then, he said to me of his own accord: 'O Sumantra! Tell the king as follows: Please do not feel sorry on my account. We shall stay in the forest more happily than in Ayodhya. 11. Convey my greetings to my mother. Let her abandon all sorrow on my account, and comfort the sorrow-stricken old king. (12-13). Next, Sita with tears flowing from her eyes and speech choked by sorrow, said, casting a glance at Rama: 'Convey my full prostrations to my father-in-law and mother-in-law!' So said Sita weeping and with face inclined downward. (14-15). Next, shedding tears, they got into a boat, and I watched them until they crossed the Ganges. After that, with my heart heavy with sorrow, I came over to this place." Now, Kausalya with tears in her eyes said to the king as follows:

16. She said, "Out of fondness for your dear wife Kaikeyi, you gave her a boon. According to that, let the kingdom go to her son. But why should my son be exiled to the forest? (17-19). You have been yourself responsible for the present situation. Then why weep so much over it?" These words of Kausalya, had on the king, the effect of a flame touching a festering wound.

Again, with tears flowing from his eyes, he said to Kausalya as follows: "Why are you inflicting more sorrow on me, who am now going to die out of sorrow. My Prana will surely depart even now. All this is the effect of the curse of a sage for a thoughtless action of mine.

Muni's curse on Dasaratha (20-46)

20. "In my youth, equipped with bow and arrows, I was once hunting at night near a deep forest on a river bank. (21-22). There at midnight, came a sage to fetch water from the river in order to quench the thirst of himself and of his thirsty parents. He immersed the jug in the water, giving rise to a great gurgling sound. In that dark night, when nothing could be seen, I could hear only the sound, and I thought that it was an elephant drinking water. So, I shot in that direction an arrow, which could track a sound and strike the target even without visibility. (23-26). ‘Alas! I am dead,’ came a human cry from that direction. Further the voice said, ‘I have done no harm to anyone. O God! Who is it that is killing me? My father and mother are awaiting my arrival in a very thirsty condition.’ Hearing these words, uttered by a human voice, I trembled with fear. I went close to the person stricken by the arrow and said, ‘O holy Sir! I am Dasaratha. I shot the arrow unaware of the nature of the target. O sage, I seek your pardon.’ I said so in a choked voice and fell at his feet. The sage thereupon said, ‘O king! Do not be afraid. 27. You will not be affected by the sin of Brahmahatya. I am only a Vaisya engaged in austerities. My parents, stricken with hunger and thirst, are awaiting my arrival. (28-30) Take some water to them. Don’t waste time in vain thought. It should be done quickly. Otherwise, my father might get angry and reduce you to ashes. Give them water to drink and prostrate before them and inform them of what has happened. Now remove the arrow from my body so that I, who am in great agony, may die immediately.’ At these words of the sage, I pulled out the arrow quickly, and then with a pot of water in my hand, I went to the sage and his wife.

(31-35). I found them very aged, blind and suffering from extreme hunger and thirst. They were preoccupied with the thought, ‘Our son is not bringing water. What is it due to? Is it possible that such a devoted son would abandon his parents like us, who are old, thirsty and pitiable, and with no other support than he?’ While troubled by such sorrowful thoughts they heard the sound of my footsteps. And the father said, ‘O my son! Why is it that you have delayed? Give us some sweet water to drink, and you, too, drink of it.' To them, who were speaking this way, I slowly went, and making prostrations, said in all humility, 'I am not your son. I am Dasaratha, the King of Ayodhya. (36-37). Mad after chase, this sinful fellow was engaged in hunting and killing animals at night. Stationed at some distance from a source of water, I heard the gurgling sound of water. Mistaking it to be an animal drinking water in darkness, I shot an arrow that could pierce a target indicated by a sound. Next I heard the cry, 'Alas! I am killed!' Frightened at this, I went to the spot. 38. I saw there lying a young sage with his matted hair dishevelled. Terrified at the sight, I fell at his feet and prayed to be pardoned. 39. The young sage said, 'Do not be afraid of the sin of Brahmahatya. Give water to my parents to drink. Pray to them to spare your life.'

40. Directed thus by the young sage, this slayer of a holy person has come over to

you. Be merciful towards me, who am taking refuge at your feet.' 41. On hearing this account, they were stricken with unbearable grief. They gave expression to their sorrow by wailing. They gave vent to sorrowful reactions in many ways and fell on the ground. Then they said to me, 'Lead us to where our son is lying.' 42. Next, I took them to the place where their son was lying dead. Those two aged couple touched that lifeless body with their hands and lamented over their dead son in many ways. 43. They said, 'Ah our son! our son! Give us water. Why are you delaying?' 44. And then turning to me they said, 'O King! Make a funeral pyre soon.' I made it according to their order and laid the bodies of the three on it, and as desired by them, set fire to the pyre. Their bodies were burnt and they attained to heaven. (45-46). Before dying, the old sage had cursed me, 'The same fate as ours will befall you. Your death will be caused on account of sorrow connected with your son.' That curse which cannot in any way be prevented from fructifying is now taking effect." With these words, the king indulged in lamentations in many ways.

Bharata's return and confrontation with Kaikeyi (47-82)

47. He said, "O Rama, my son! O Sita! O virtuous Lakshmana! I shall now be dying because of separation from you. I am now face to face with death on account of Kaikeyi, who has brought about your separation from me." (48-49). With these words, Dasaratha breathed his last and attained to heaven. Then Kausalya, Sumitra and other ladies of the palace began to beat their breasts and cry. Early in the morning, Vasishtha along with the other ministers came to the palace. 50. They immersed the dead body of Dasaratha in a vessel of oil for its preservation. Then they called royal messengers and said to them, "Go quickly to the city of King

Yudhajit on horse back. 51. The noble prince Bharata along with Satrughna is now staying there. Tell him that I want him to return immediately. (52-56). Coming to Ayodhya, they have got to meet the King and Kaikeyi, urgently." Instructed in this way, the messengers quickly reached the place of Yudhajit, the uncle of Bharata. They then said to Bharata and his brother, "Let Bharata along with his brother come to the city of Ayodhya quickly without wasting any time in speculation—Sage Vasishtha ordered us to communicate this to you." Bharata was very much agitated to hear these instructions of the preceptor. However, in obedience to these instructions, he immediately started for Ayodhya along with his brother and the messengers, fearing all along the way that some danger must have happened to the King or to Rama. (57-58). Seeing the city of Ayodhya overcast with gloom, deserted by people and devoid of decorations, Bharata was all the more filled with vague fears. Immediately he went to the palace, which was without any royal splendour. There he saw Kaikeyi, sitting alone. To her, his mother, he made devout prostrations. 59. Bharata's arrival, filled Kaikeyi with mental excitement arising from her love of her son. She got up at once from her seat, embraced him, and seated him in her lap. (60-63). She smelt the crown of her son's head and made enquiries of him about the welfare of the people at home—about her father, brother and beloved mother. She then expressed to him her great delight in seeing him return. Depressed in mind by these words of his mother, Bharata, moved by great sorrow, asked Kaikeyi, his mother, "O mother! Where is my father? I see you here alone. It's never the habit of my father to sit alone without you. I do not see him here now. Where is he? Please tell me where he is. (64-65). I feel very much concerned at not seeing my father, and my mind is filled with sorrow and fear on account of it." Then Kaikeyi said to her son, "O virtuous and loving boy! What's the use of your sorrowing? Your father has gone the way of all those righteous men who have performed great sacrificial rites like Aswamedha."

(66-68). At these words, Bharata, overwhelmed with grief, fell down on the ground and wailed: "O my father! Where have you gone abandoning me in this ocean of sorrow? Where have you gone without entrusting me to Rama, the rightful king?" Kaikeyi now raised up her son, who was lying on the floor highly agitated and with his hair dishevelled. She wiped his eyes and said to him, "Be comforted. Everything will be well with you. I have acquired for you everything." 69. Bharata thereupon asked her, "What did my dying father say?" keyi replied: 70. "He lamented long saying, 'O Rama! O Sita! O Lakshmana!' Again and again lamenting long like this, he abandoned his body and attained to heaven." 71. Bharata now said to her, "O mother! Where are Rama,Lakshmana and Sita then? Were they not by his side, or had they gone anywhere?""

72. Kaikeyi replied, "Your father made hurried arrangements for installing Rama as Yuvaraja. I obstructed this arrangement so that the kingdom may come to you. (73-78). The liberal-minded King had given me two boons in days of old. I wanted him to fulfil these now. By one of them I secured the whole kingdom for you, and by the other, I got Rama expelled to the forest to lead an ascetic life there. Accordingly, your father, the King, has assigned the kingdom to you and sent Rama to the forest. Sita, according to the duties of a chaste wife, has opted to follow him to the forest, and Lakshmana, too, has done so impelled by his love for his brother. After their departure, the King was lamenting continuously, calling the name of Rama, and in the end died." Hearing these words of his mother, Bharata fell unconscious on the floor as if struck with a sharp weapon. Kaikeyi, who was grief-stricken to see her son in that condition, again said, "O dear son! Why are you sorrow-stricken? (79-80) When this great kingdom has come to you, where is the occasion for grief?" At these words of his mother, Bharata addressed her with a flaming, fiery look in his eyes, as if he were going to burn her up. He said, "O hideous and sinful creature! You are a murderer of your own husband. It is improper for me to converse with you. By being born in the womb of a sinful person like you, I have also become a sinner.

(81-82). Therefore I am going to enter into a fire or end my life by taking poison. Or I shall slay myself with the sword and go to the realm of Yama, the king of death. O evil one! You murderer of your own husband! You are bound to be confined to the hell of Kumbhipaka." Abusing Kaikeyi in this way, Bharata now went to the house of Kausalya. Alas! At the sight of Bharata, Kausalya wept aloud without restraint.

(83-85). Bharata, while prostrating at her feet, also wept along with her. Rama's mother Kausalya, the virtuous and chaste wife, had become very lean and pitiable to look at. She now embraced Bharata, and with tears flowing from her eyes, said to him: "O son! When you were far away, all these unfortunate events have happened. You must have already heard from your mother a report about all these achievements of hers. My son Rama, the gladdener of the hearts of all of Raghu's line, has along with his wife and Lakshmana gone to the forest, donning the tree-bark and matted locks of ascetics. He has thus left me plunged in the ocean of grief. 86. O Rama! Thou art the Supreme Lord, born in me as my son. Still I am not able to overcome grief. I deem destiny is too strong for anyone to overcome."

87. Seeing her thus wailing out of inexpressible sorrow, Bharata, held her feet and said as follows to her: "O mother! Hear my words. (88-90). If I have any part in what Kaikeyi has done to obstruct Rama's installation and in other allied matters, if I had been responsible for prompting her in these respects, let, O mother, the sin of a hundred Brahmahatyas befall me. If these have been done even with my slightest knowledge, let me be overcome by the sin of murdering Vasishtha and his consort Arundhati with the sword." Giving expression to his innocence in this way, Bharata began to wail.

Vasishta's Advice to Bharata (91-114)

(91-92). Then Kausalya embraced him and said, "O Son! I understand you. Don't grieve." Meantime, hearing about the arrival of Bharata, Vasishtha in the company of Ministers went to the palace. Seeing Bharata weeping, he said to him lovingly: (93-94). "King Dasaratha was advanced in years. He was a wise one and noted for his truthfulness. Having enjoyed all that human life can offer, having performed great sacrifices like Aswamedha involving magnificent gifts, and having obtained Sri Hari himself as his son in the shape of Rama, he has now in the end attained to the realm of Indra where he has a seat along with Indra himself. 95. He is eligible to get Moksha, liberation, and therefore it is meaningless to feel sorry for his death. Your sorrow is all misplaced. The Atman is eternal and indestructible. He is pure and devoid of birth, death and other transformations. There is thus no ground for you to mourn over your father's spirit which has attained liberation. 96. And as for the body, it is insentient, impure and subject to destruction. When you reflect like this, you will find no reason for sorrow. 97. Thoughtless and ignorant people wail beating their breast when a father or a son dies. 98. But as for the wise ones, who understand this transitory life to be trivial, the phenomenon of death becomes a means for strengthening their spirit of renunciation and obtaining the bliss of peace. 99. If a man is born in this world, death follows him, to be sure. Therefore, for all creatures that have birth, death is unavoidable. 100. Even an ignorant man, who understands the common principle that birth and death of an individual are regulated by his Karma, will find no cause of sorrow when death occurs. Then, what justification is there for an enlightened man like you to be sorrow-stricken in this situation? 101. Thousands of world systems are getting destroyed in the course of creative cycles, and many such creative cycles have passed. So also many oceans have dried up. Before this vision of Infinity, how can there be attachment for this very short span of a human life? 102. Man's life is as fickle as a drop of water on a leaf, it being subject to destruction at any moment. You find beings meeting with untimely death even in infancy. Why then do you attach so much reality value to life? 103.. The embodied being(Jiva)has got his present embodiment as a result of the Karmas he has performed in a previous embodiment. The Jiva, who is thus embodied at present, gets still another embodiment after the death of the present body as a result of the Karmas he has performed in this birth. In this way, the Jiva gets body after body. 104. Just as a man puts aside worn out clothes and puts on new ones, just like that the spirit within discards a body that has become decrepit and assumes a new body. This is an eternal process. 105. What reason is there to be sorrowful because of this phenomenon? The spirit (Atman) never dies, is never born and it never grows (106-107). The spirit (Atman)that is embodied in one is the Supreme non-dual Self itself. He is devoid of the six forms of transformations. He is of the nature of Truth, Consciousness and Bliss—the witness of Buddhi and other changeful layers of personality. Free from dissolution, he is ever the same. Knowing full well that the Atman is like this, abandon grief and proceed to do what is next required of you. 108. O noble one! Take the body of your father from the vessel of oil in which it is preserved, and along with your ministers and myself, proceed to perform all the usual funeral obsequies."

109. Abandoning the grief born of ignorance as a result of the preceptor's above instructions, Bharata performed all the funeral obsequies of his father in the proper form. 110. He cremated the body.

of his father, who had performed many fire sacrifices, according to the rules of the scriptures as expounded by the preceptor. 111. On the eleventh day after cremation he duly fed hundreds and thousands of holy men, who were versed in all the Vedas. 112. In the name of his father, he gave them also many gifts—money, herds of cattle, villages, and bejewelled clothes. 113. Surrounded by his ministers, besides the preceptor Vasishtha, he lived with his brother Satrughna in the palace, constantly thinking of Rama. 114. He thought: "My heart burns with unbearable feelings as with fire, when I think of the circumstances under which Rama along with Sita and Lakshmana had to go to the forest and when I see the face of that demoness of my mother who is the cause of all this tragedy. So with a firm resolution, I shall abandon this kingdom and everything connected with it, and go to the forest to be in constant attendance on Rama, whose face is attractive by the bewitching smile playing on it."

BHARATA ON THE TRAILS OF RAMA

Bharata on the way to the forest to fetch Rama (1-14)

1. The great Vasishtha accompanied by the sages and surrounded by the ministers entered the royal assembly which resembled the celestial assembly itself. (2-3). The preceptor Vasishtha now seated himself in the assembly even like Brahmā himself and directed Bharata along with his brother to the other seats and said to that heroic prince the following words appropriate for the occasion. He said, i, "O dear one! I am going to install you on the throne, after anointing you, as ordered by your father. 4. O noble one! The Queen Kaikeyi requested the King to give you this kingdom and the truthful Raja Dasaratha in fulfilment of his promise, informed us that he had granted the request. 5. Therefore, let the installation ceremony now start in this assembly of sages to the accompaniment of the chanting of appropriate Mantras." Hearing these words, Bharata said, "O great sage! Of what use is this kingdom to me? (6-11) Rama, the king of kings, is the ruler of us all, and we are his servants. Immediately, tomorrow morning itself, I shall go to fetch Rama in the company of you all and my mothers except that demoness of a Kaikeyi. I would have killed that so-called mother of mine now itself, had it not been for the fact that Rama would not approve the slaughter of a woman. Tomorrow itself at sun rise, I shall start with Satrughna to the Dandaka forest on foot, whether you all are ready to accompany me or not. In the same manner in which Rama went to the forest, I shall proceed—wearing the tree-bark cloth, eating fruits and roots, sleeping on the ground and having matted locks. I shall observe this rule until Rama returns." Announcing his resolution to this effect, Bharata resumed silence. All the sages, theréupon acclaimed his resolution.

12. When Bharata started in the morning as announced, the minister Sumantra directed the army with its regiments of horses and elephants to follow him. 13. The royal ladies like Kausalya, the sages like Vasishtha and all others moved behind and on the sides of Bharata, all together covering an extensive area of land. 14. Bharata and his followers now reached the town of Sringavera. The men of the army and the others who were under the command of

(15-16) Hearing the arrival of Bharata in his principality, Guha with a suspicious mind reflected: "Bharata has arrived with a big army. Has he come to do some mischief to Rama, who does not know anything about his movements? I must know what is in his mind. If his intentions are good, I shall help him to cross the Ganga. 17. If his intentions are mischievous, myself and my relatives and dependants shall withdraw all boats from the river and with weapons in hand guard the approaches on all sides." 18. Directing all his followers in this way, Guha now went to where Bharata was camping, carrying with him many objects of presentation in his hand. 19. It was in the company of a large number of friends and dependants, all bearing arms, that he went to see Bharata with those objects of presentation, which he now placed in front of him. (20-21). Guha saw Bharata there in the company of his brother and ministers—Bharata blue in complexion like a cloud, wearing a crown of matted locks, donned in tree-bark garment and constantly uttering the name of Rama. Guha now prostrated before him and announced himself by name. 22. Bharata at once lifted him up and embraced him with great affection and made enquiries about his welfare. Then he spoke in a very peaceful tone the following words to that friend. (23-25). He said, "O brother! Is it in this place that you met Rama, the scion of Raghu's line? Is it in this place that Rama of kindly look and pure heart embraced you? You are, indeed, blessed and you have achieved the purpose of your life in that you were spoken to by the lotus-eyed Rama. Show me the spot where you met Rama along with Lakshmana and Sita, and conversed with them. Lead me to that place where Rama and Sita slept. (26-28). You are extremely dear to Rama, and you are devoted to him too." Remembering Rama again and again in this way, Bharata, with tears brimming over his eyes, went in the company of Guha to the spot where Rama spent the night. Seeing there the grass bed, gleaming here and there with the gold-dust from Sita's jewels, Bharata, with a heart smitten with sorrow, wept bitterly. (29-30). He began to bemoan: "Sita, the tender-bodied daughter of Janaka, was always accustomed to sleep on golden cots with soft mattresses on the upper floor of the palace. Alas! That Sita, because of my fault, has now to sleep along with Rama on a bed of grass. How could she stand this ordeal? 31. It is because of my enormous sin that I have been born as the son of Kaikeyi. I have been the cause of all this woe to Rama who is the Supreme Being Himself. 32. The birth of high-souled Lakshmana is indeed fruitful. Though he is staying in the forest, he is able to follow Rama always. 33. My birth would have been fulfilled, if I could have served even the servants of Rama's servants. 34. Dear brother! If you know anything about Rama, tell all that to me. I shall go to him wherever he is, and get him back at once."

(35-37). Finding Bharata's motives to be pure, Guha said to him lovingly, "Lord, you are indeed fortunate to have this kind of devotion to the lotus-eyed Rama, Sita and Lakshmana. He is now staying along with Sita and brother Lakshmana in a colony inhabited by ascetics near the Chitrakuta mountain and not far from the Ganga. (38-39). We shall cross the Ganga here and reach that place soon." With these words, he quickly went and gathered together five hundred boats for Bharata to cross the river with his troops. Guha himself brought a royal boat for Bharata's use. (40-41). Seating Bharata, Satrughna, Rama's mother and Vasishtha in that, and Kaikeyi and the other women in another, he crossed the Ganga and went towards the Ashrama of Bharadwaja. Stationing the army at a distance, Bharata along with his brother went to that Ashrama.

Bharata at Bharadwaja's Ashrama (47-63)

42. Seeing sage Bharadwaja sitting there, radiant like fire, Bharata prostrated himself before him with great reverence. 43. Hearing that the visitor, though donning tree-bark and matted locks, was the son of King Dasaratha, the sage received him with great joy and made enquiries about his welfare. 44. The sage asked him, "You are now ruling the kingdom. How is it that you have put on the tree-bark garment? What is it that brings you to this forest inhabited by ascetics?"

(45-48) Hearing the words of Bharadwaja, Bharata said with tears flowing from his eyes. "O holy one! You, who can read the minds of all beings, are already acquainted with everything. Yet you are making this enquiry of me, this is indeed my good fortune, I had not the least inkling of the evil designs of Kaikeyi, by which Rama was expelled to the forest. O great sage! Your holy self is today the witness of this fact." With these words, Bharata, in a mood of extreme sorrow, held the feet of the sage and said, "O Master! You are capable of understanding whether I am innocent or not. 49. O holy one! When Rama, the rightful king, is alive, what have I got to do with the kingdom? I am only the eternal servant of Rama. (50-51). O great sage! Therefore, I shall go to the place where Rama is and fall at his feet. Along with Vasishtha and the leading citizens, I shall have the installation ceremony of Rama performed here itself with all the necessary materials I have brought with me, and lead him, the consort of Rama, to Ayodhya as the king. I shall remain with him as the humblest of his servants."

52. Amazed at these words of Bharata, the sage embraced him and approved of his words. 53. He said, "Dear one! With the eye of wisdom, I have already been able to know the events that were to happen. Be not sorry. Your devotion to Rama is indeed greater than that of Lakshmana even.

54. O sinless one! I wish to extend hospitality to you and your following. So you have your food and stay here tonight and go to see Rama tomorrow."

(55-56). Bharata agreed to this proposal. Thereupon, Bharadwaja went to his sacrificial chamber in silence, and desirous of meeting all the needs of his guests, meditated on Kamadhenu, the heavenly cow of plenty. And Kamadhenu created by her mysterious power all the requirements of the party without any physical aid. 57. According to Bharata's requirements, all things appeared in abundance to the great satisfaction of the troops constituting Bharata's retinue. 58. The great Yogi Bharadwaja first extended his hospitality to Vasishtha according to the Sastras, and then did the same to Bharata and to the other members of his party.

(59-62). After spending the night in that heavenly Ashrama, Bharata did obeisance to the sage in the morning and with his permission started along with his brother to the presence of Rama. Reaching Chitrakuta he stationed his army at a distance, and in great eagerness to meet Rama, went along with Satrughna, Sumantra and Guha to the colony of ascetics staying there. He searched for Rama's residence everywhere in that place, but failing to locate it, made enquiries of the Rishis there as to where Rama with Sita and Lakshmana was staying. (63-65). They told him, "There on the northern side of the Ganga, behind the mountain, you will see a solitary place surrounded by a thick growth of several fruit-laden trees like Amra, Panasa, Punnaga, Kovidara, Champaka and plantain. There you will find before you, Rama's residence." Thereupon, Bharata proceeded in great joy to that place with his brother and ministers. 66. Bharata and his brother Satrughna saw at a distance, the glorious residence of Rama frequented by ascetics, where the tops of trees were distinguished by the tree-bark clothes and deer-skin hung on them for sunning.

Chapter 9

BHARATA'S RETURN AND AFTER

Performance of Dasaratha's Funeral Rites (1-20)

1. Now Bharata in great joy reached the precincts of that holy Ashrama of Rama, the ground of which was marked by the foot-prints of Rama and Sita. 2. Seeing those footprints, with marks of Vajra, Ankusa, lotus, flag etc.—the merit-generating marks of Rama's feet—Bharata and his brother Satrughna covered themselves with the dust carrying these impressions. 3. Bharata said, "What a great good fortune! I am indeed blessed to see this ground rendered holy by the feet of Rama, the dust of which is the quest of Brahma and other Devas as also of the Vedas." 4. With his mind overflowing by the out-burst of divine love, his chest wet with tears of joy and his attention concentrated on Rama, Bharata slowly approached the residence of Rama, who was none but Sri Hari Himself. (5-6). There he saw Rama sitting along with Sita and attended upon by Lakshmana—Rama who was of blue complexion like Durva grass, who had long eyes, who wore a crown of matted locks on his head, who had on him a tree-bark garment as dress, whose face was calm and placid, and who had the radiance of the mid-day sun. Overcome by both sorrow and joy at the same time, Bharata hurried towards him and prostrating himself before him, held his feet with both his hands. 7. Rama, who was possessed of long arms, now lifted him up, embraced him, and wetted his body with tears. Seating him in his lap, Rama, that All-pervading Being, embraced him again and again. 8. As a thirsty cow hurries towards a water receptacle, the mothers of Rama, who were anxious to meet him, also went towards him quickly. 9. Seeing his mother, Rama got up in haste and with tears flowing from his eyes, prostrated himself at her feet, and she embraced her son, extremely grief-stricken. (10-11). Rama did obeisance to his other mothers also. Seeing Vasishtha in the party, he made a full prostration before him and said that he was indeed blessed to see the sage. Then he seated them all in proper seats and said as follows: (12-13). He said, "How is my father? Sorrow-stricken by my departure, what message has he sent to me through you?" To him Vasishtha replied, "O leader of Raghу's line! Your father, burning as it were in the fire of sorrow, was thinking constantly of you and always calling out, 'O, Rama! O Sita! O Lakshmana!' Alas! he is now dead."

14. These words of the preceptor went into Rama's ears like the piercing pain of an ear-cancer. Calling out, "O father! O father! woe unto me," he fell on the ground, and along with Lakshmana, began to weep. 15. He cried aloud, "O merciful father! Where have you gone abandoning me?" Following him, all his mothers and others began to cry. 16. He bemoaned saying, "O noble one! I am now orphaned. Who will hereafter fondle me?" Following him, Sita and Lakshmana cried out even more loudly. (17-18). Vasishtha now assuaged their grief with his consoling words. Then, they all went to the river and purifying themselves by bathing made offerings of water to the king as desired by him at the time of death. Lakshmana and Rama also performed the rite of offering morsels of food to the departed. 19. The balls of food that they offered were made of the flour of a certain forest plant mixed with honey and rolled into lumps—a food which all ascetics took. "The scriptures have declared that we should offer to our ancestors whatever type of food we are taking"—with this thought they consoled themselves. 20. After making this offering to the departed, Rama again took his bath, and weeping, returned to his Ashrama. After weeping for a considerable time, all the others also took their bath again and went back to the Ashrama.

Bharata Persuaded to Return (21-53)

(21-23). That day after the performance of the funeral obsequies, they all observed fast. Next day, after a bath in the pure water of the river, Bharata said to Rama who was seated, "O noble one! Permit us to have you installed as King. Come and rule over the kingdom that has come to you from our father. You are elder to me and so equal to father. So, following the Dharma of Kshatriyas, perform the duty of ruling over the subjects. (24-26). After performing many Yajnas and pro-creating sons to continue your line, the proper time for you to abandon everything would come, then entrusting the responsibility of the kingdom to your son and successor, you can go to the forest: not now. Be gracious towards me. Please forget the evil deeds of my mother. Deign to come and rule over us all." Saying so, he placed his brother's feet on his own head and lay prostrate like a stick before him.

27. Rama quickly raised him up and seating him in his lap said to him slowly with his heart melting in affection. (28-32) "Dear brother!" said he, "hear what I say. There is much truth in what you have represented. Yet it is a fact that our father ordered me to spend fourteen years in the Dandaka forest and then only return to the city; and for that period, he has assigned the kingdom to you, Bharata.

So it is clear that the kingdom has been given to you by our father himself. And to me likewise has been assigned the kingdom of Dandaka forest by our father. It is therefore the duty of us both to obey strictly the command of our father. One who disobeys his father and goes about doing things according to his own sweet will, is as good as dead even while living. He is sure to be consigned to hell after death. Therefore, you rule over the kingdom, and we shall look after the forest.

33. To this Bharata replied: "Our father when he gave the order was under infatuation for a woman, a victim of passion, and therefore out of his senses. His words need not be taken seriously any more than of any demented person." 34. Rama corrected him saying, "You cannot say that our father was infatuated by a woman, or was a victim of passion and out of his senses. Truthful by nature, he was afraid of being false to his plighted word if he failed to give to Kaikeyi the boon he had promised her long ago. (35-36). Noble personages fear untruth more than hell. I too have undertaken before Kaikeyi that I shall do as ordered by our father. Being one born in Raghu's line, how can I break the tradition of my family and fail to fulfil a promise?" Hearing these words of Rama, Bharata replied: 37. "O truthful one! On your behalf I shall then live in the forest for fourteen years, donning the ascetic's tree-bark cloth. You rule over the kingdom and live happily." 38. "The kingdom has been assigned to you by our father," said Rama, rejecting this proposal, "and to me he has given the forest. An agreed mutual exchange of these gifts will not save the situation, as even this would involve a breach of promise." (39-40). Bharata now pleaded: "In that case I too shall stay in the forest with you like Lakshmana and serve you. If you decide otherwise, I shall end my life by fasting." Resolving like that, he had some Darbha grass spread in the sun and sat on it facing the east.

41. Seeing that Bharata was determined about this course of action, Rama, by a sign of his eyes, requested the preceptor Vasishtha to intervene and save the situation. 42. Then Vasishtha took Bharata aside to a solitary place and said to him: "Dear boy! Hear from me a secret concerning certain unalterable matters. 43. Rama is really Lord Narayana Himself. Requested by Brahma He has incarnated Himself as the son of Dasaratha for destroying Ravana. 44. And Yogamaya, the Sakti of Vishnu, has embodied Herself as Sita, the daughter of Janaka. Adisesha, the mystic serpent serving as Vishnu's bed, is born as Lakshmana in order to follow and attend on Rama always (45-46). They are therefore bound to proceed onward for the destruction of Ravana. The gift of boon to Kaikeyi and her heartless words in this connection were all the result of the will of Providence. Had it not been for this, how could she have spoken what she did? Therefore, dear one, give up your idea of getting Rama back. 47. Along with your army and your brother, you now go back to the city. After destroying Ravana along with all his tribe, Rama will return soon."

(48-49). Hearing these words of the teacher, Bharata was amazed, and with eyes widened by wonder, approached Rama and said: "O greatest of monarchs! Give me your worship-worthy footwear to serve as a symbol of your rulership over the kingdom. Until your return I shall rule as your servant through the service of your footwear representing you." 50. With these words Bharata put on Rama's feet a magnificent pair of sandals and Rama taking them up returned them solemnly to Bharata. 51. Now Bharata, receiving these sandals made of precious metals and studded with jewels, circumambulated Rama and made prostrations to him again and again. (52-53). Then Bharata said, with his voice choked with an outburst of devotion, "If you do not return to Ayodhya on the very first day after the period of fourteen years, I will enter into a well-lit fire." Rama accepted this prayer of Bharata and sent him back on that understanding.

Kaikeyi's conversion and hymn (54-65)

54. Bharata along with his army, preceptor Vasishtha, brother Satrughna, his mothers, and the ministers, was about to start on his return journey to Ayodhya. (55-56). Just then Kaikeyi in a highly distressed mood and with tears flowing from her eyes, called Rama aside and said to him in privacy: "O Rama! Under a spell of delusion my evil mind prompted me to obstruct Thy installation as the Yuvaraja. I beseech Thee to pardon me for the bad turn I did to Thee thereby. men. 57. You are verily Mahavishnu, the Supreme Spirit and Eternal Being, whose nature is not clear to any one. Assuming the form of a man Thou art hiding Thy identity. Man performs good and evil acts only under Thy prompting. (58-59). This whole world is subject to Thy will, and is without any freedom. Just as puppet dolls dance according to the will of their hidden director who pulls the strings unseen, so is this multiformed Maya a dancer manipulated by Thy will. I too was prompted by Thee as a part of Thy scheme for the fulfilment of the purpose of the Devas. 60. Under the influence of my evil mind, I have done this sinful act. Now alone have I understood Thee to be the indwelling Spirit in all—Thee who art beyond the ken even of the celestials. (61-62). Save me, O Infinite Being, Thou the lord and protector of the worlds. Deign to cut asunder with the sword of knowledge of Thy exalted Self, my bondage of attachment to son, wealth and other worldly objects. I have taken refuge in Thee."

Hearing these words of Kaikeyi, Rama said to her smilingly: '63. "O noble lady! What you have just now said is the exact truth. The words that came out of your mouth, took shape under My prompting. (64-69). Thus by your choice of boons etc., which were prompted by Me for the attainment of the purpose of the Devas, you incur no sin. So you return home in peace. Let your mind be constantly absorbed in My thought. Abandon your attachment for all worldly objects, and be whole-heartedly devoted to Me. Soon will you gain liberation by following this way of life. view all beings alike. None is inimical or dear to Me. I am like the heavenly tree Kalpaka-Vriksha. Whoever go under it and pray, get what they want, and whoever exclude themselves from it keeping away, do not get those favours. To those who resign themselves to Me, I respond by revealing Myself. Those whose minds are clouded by My Maya, see Me as a human being, subject to the happiness and sufferings of worldly life. They do not know Me in truth and in reality. Fortunately that enlightenment which liberates one from this transmigratory life, has dawned on you. Stay at home attending to your duties, but remembering Me always. That will save you from the bondage of that hankering after the fruits that Karma brings." Hearing these words of Rama, Kaikeyi was filled with wonder and joy. She circumambulated Rama, and prostrated before him several times. She then returned to the palace pacified in mind.

(70-75). Soon Bharata the noble-minded arrived at Ayodhya along with his preceptor, mothers and the ministers, constantly remembering Rama. After making all the necessary arrangements for the residence and administration of the citizens of Ayodhya, he himself went to stay in a village called Nandigrama. There on a throne he reverently installed the sandals of Rama he had brought with him and daily worshipped them as representing Rama, with flowers, sandal paste etc., as also with all objects that are considered as royal insignia. In his daily life he observed strict ascetic discipline. His food consisted of roots and fruits, and his attire, of a tree-bark garments and matted locks. He slept on the bare floor, and strictly observed the rule of celibacy. Satrughna kept him company. He transacted all the affairs of state after first representing them before the sandals of Rama in token of his taking orders from Rama. Counting the days of Rama's return, he lived like a Brahmarshi, dedicating his whole mind to Rama.

76. As for Rama, though he took his residence in Chitrakuta with Sita and Lakshmana amidst the settlement of the ascetics of that place, he did not, however, continue to stay there long. (77-79). For, knowing that Rama was staying at Mount Chitrakuta, large numbers of people from the countryside began to visit that place because of their eagerness to meet him. To avoid the disturbance from the crowds, as also for the fulfilment of the ultimate object of his exile to the forest, he abandoned his residence at Chitrakuta, and proceeded towards Dandakaranya. On the way he along with Sita and his brother, reached the Ashrama of the sage Atri, which was situated at a very solitary place, with the necessary facilities for one to stay all round the year. 80. There in that Ashrama was seated the sage Atri, illuminating the whole place with his lustre. Rama prostrated before him and announced himself to the sage saying, "I am Rama, offering my salutations to you. 81. According to my father's order, I have come to the Dandaka forest. In the guise of forest life an occasion has arisen for me to meet your holy self." 82. Hearing Rama's words and knowing him to be Hari Himself, the sage Atri extended to him a very warm reception with great devotion. 83. He gave hospitality by presenting to him fruits of the forest. Seating Rama, Sita and Lakshmana, the sage said the following in great joy: (84-85) "Inside the Ashrama, there is my aged wife Anasuya who has been performing austerities for a very long time, and who has a deep knowledge of Dharma and has been observing the same. O destroyer of enemies! Let Sita go in and see her." The lotus-eyed Rama asked Sita to do as requested by the sage. 86. He said: "O good lady! Go in and make salutations to holy Anasuya and come back soon." And Sita did accordingly. (87-90). Holy Anasuya was very glad to see Sita, who made a full prostration before her. Addressing her as "Dear Sita", Anasuya with great devotion presented her two heavenly ear ornaments made by Viswakarma, as also two lovely pieces of silk. She also gave Sita a unique paste for bodily application with the words, "O lotus-faced one! By the application of this paste, the lustre of your body will remain undimmed. O daughter of Janaka! Following the duty of a pious wife, you now follow Rama. May that great personage soon return to his palace with you!"

(91-92). Afterwards the sage Atri fed Rama, Sita and Lakshmana sumptuously, and with palms joined in salutation said: "O Rama! Thou alone art the creator of all these worlds. After creating them, Thou manifestest for their protection and orderly growth, as incarnations in the species of Devas, humans and brute creations. Though embodied in this way, the bodily traits do not affect Thee. Maya which deludes all, remains aloof from Thee out of fear of Thee."

ARANYA KANDAM

Chapter 1

TOWARDS DANDAKARANYA

Redemption of Viradha (1-35)

1. Rama spent the rest of the day at that Ashrama and in the morning took leave of the sage and was ready to start on his journey. 2. He said to the sage: "O holy one! We are all going to the forest known as Dandaka, where many ascetics are staying. We seek your blessing. (3-5). Please direct some of your disciples to show us the path." Hearing Rama's words, the great sage Atri said, smiling:

"O Rama! Thou the support of even the celestials! Thou art the Pathfinder for all beings. How can any one therefore show Thee the Path? Still following the way of the world, we shall show the path." With these words, he deputed some of his disciples for the purpose, and himself followed Rama for some distance. Persuaded by Rama to return, the sage did accordingly, and went back to his Ashrama. (6-9) When they had walked the distance of about a Krosa, they came across a great river. "How can we cross this river?" asked Rama, and the disciples of Atri replied: "O noble descendant of Raghu's line! There is an excellent boat for the purpose. We ourselves shall take you across the river in a short time." Then they fetched the boat, seated Rama, Sita and Lakshmana in it, and the young ascetics themselves rowed the party across the river. Rama appreciated very much the skill they displayed. They later returned to Atri's Ashrama.

(10-11). Now Rama and party entered into the terrifying and thickly wooded forest of Dandaka. With the shrill chirping of insects, with animals of various species everywhere, with dangerous wild animals like lions and tigers prowling about, and with fierce-looking Rakshasas infesting its precincts, that awesome forest would create horripilation on the body of anyone. Entering into the forest Rama said to Lakshmana, Sumitra's son: (12-13). "From here onwards we should travel very carefully. Along with me you should have your bow strung and arrows ready at hand. I shall walk in front and you behind. Sita will walk between us, just as Maya, the illusory power, stands between the Paramatma (Supreme Spirit) and the Jiva (the embodied spirit). 14. Look around carefully. O heroic one! Dandakaranya is notorious for the many Rakshasas infesting it. I have heard of this even before."

(15-17). Travelling and conversing thus between themselves, they covered about a Yojana and a half when they came across a lake of cool and crystal waters full of lotuses and water lilies of various kinds. Approaching that lake, they drank of its sweet waters, and sat under a shade on its bank for some time. A terrible-looking monster now appeared in their sight (18-19). The monster had fierce fangs and his howls spread terror all around. On his left shoulder rested a trident, at the sharp end of which were impaled several human bodies. He was moving about, eating whatever wild animal he saw—be it elephant, tiger, lion or bison. At the sight of that monster, Rama lifted his bow in readiness for use and said to Lakshmana: (20-21). “Look, brother, at what is before us. There comes a Rakshasa with a huge body towards us. His form is fear-inspiring in those who are timid. Stand with your bow in readiness. Do not be frightened, O daughter of Janaka.” Saying so, Rama stood firm like a mountain, bow and arrow in hand.

22. Seeing Rama along with Sita and Lakshmana, that monster gave out fierce howls and said as follows in a threatening manner: (23-24). “Who are you in the assumed forms of ascetics donning tree-bark and matted hair, but with bows and arrows in hand and accompanied by a woman? You are handsome and extremely wanton. Alas! You are almost in my mouth as a morsel of food for me. Why have you dared to come into this terrible forest infested by all kinds of fierce creatures?” (25-26). To these words of the Rakshasa, Rama replied smiling, “I am Rama. This is my dear brother Lakshmana and this my wife Sita. At the command of my father we have come here to free this place from menacing fellows like you.”

(27-29). Hearing these words of Rama, the demon gave out a terrific howl, and with mouth wide open and grasping the trident with both his hands, shouted in haste: “O Rama! Haven’t you heard of me, the world renowned Viradha? All the ascetics have left this region of the forest out of fear of me. If you want to save your life, you abandon your weapons and leave Sita here, and run away in all haste. Otherwise I am going to eat up both of you." 30. With these words the Rakshasa rushed forward to get hold of Sita. At this Rama severed both his arms with a single arrow with utmost ease.

(31-32). Then with his mouth wide open out of great anger, he came running towards Rama. Confronting Viradha who came charging, Rama cut his two legs with utmost ease to the astonishment of all. (33-34). Viradha now crawled towards Rama like a serpent with a view to devour him. Now with a semi-circular arrow Rama cut off his head, which fell in a river of blood on the ground. Sita thereupon congratulated Rama on his great feat. 35. The kettle drums of the heavens now sounded. The celestials and the Apsaras, the heavenly artistes, danced while the Gandharvas and the Kinnaras sang.

Viradha's Hymn (36-46)

36. There came out of Viradha's body a very handsome form, bright, dressed in excellent robes, decorated with shining golden ornaments, and luminous like the sun in the sky. 37. That being with a very placid appearance, now fell again and again in prostration before Rama, who destroys the sorrows of all who prostrate before him and take shelter under him, who is capable of terminating the term of Jivas in Samsara, and who is a veritable treasure of mercy. 38. Viradha said, "O Rama of lotus eyes! I am a Vidyadhara of luminous form. In days of old, I was cursed for no special reason by sage Durvasas, who is an embodiment of anger. Today I am liberated from the effect of it by Thee. (39-40). Freed from Samsara, may my mind always keep remembrance of Thy lotus-feet. May my speech be ever engaged in uttering Thy exalted names. May my ears ever imbibe the nectar of Thy stories. May my hands be constantly engaged in making offerings to Thee. May my head be ever laid at Thy feet in prostration. May the whole of my being, body, mind and soul be thus absorbed in the service of Thee. (41-42). Salutation to Thee, Rama with Sita—Thou the Supreme Being and creator of the worlds. Devoid of all attributes, Thou art of the nature of Pure Consciousness, ever absorbed in Thy own Self. Protect me, who am a refugee at Thy feet. With Thy permission, O the noblest one in Raghu's line, I would like to go to my heavenly abode. May Thy Maya never cloud my vision.” 43. When Viradha prayed in this way, the noble Rama was much pleased, and in a mood of great joy bestowed boons on Viradha. 44. He said, “O Vidyadhara! You may now go. By seeing Me, you have overcome all the limitations of Maya. You have become liberated this very moment and have been elevated to the rank of the great knowing ones. 45. In this world of living beings, pure devotion to Me is very seldom found; for if one has that type of Bhakti, he attains Mukti immediately and is no longer in this world of beings in bondage. So endowed with Bhakti, you will now at my command attain Mukti.” 46. Rama accomplished the destruction of this fierce Rakshasa, but the Rakshasa thereby gained liberation. He received Rama's blessings and boons, and attained the status of a Vidyadhara again. So will every man attain to all blessings of life if he would but serve Rama and sing hymns in praise of him.

Chapter 2

VISIT TO THE ASHRAMAS OF SARABHANGA AND SUTIKSHNA

At Sarabhanga's Ashrama

1. After Viradha attained salvation, Rama along with Sita and Lakshmana went to the peaceful forest hermitage of the sage Sarabhanga. 2. At the sight of Rama arriving at his place in the company of Sita and Lakshmana, the high-minded sage Sarabhanga got up from his seat in hot haste out of respect for the visitors. 3. He went towards them, received them cordially and offered them seats. He then did hospitality to them with roots, fruits, etc., available in the forest. (4-5). Rejoiced at the presence of Rama, the refuge of all devotees, at his hermitage, the sage Sarabhanga said, "O Rama! Thou art verily the Lord of all. With a view to meet Thee,

I have been staying here long, resolved to be engaged in austerities. Whatever merits I have acquired, all that I offer unto Thee so that I may obtain Moksha or Mukti." 6. After thus offering all his merits at the feet of Rama the holy sage Sarabhanga, who was full of renunciation, prostrated before that immeasurable being Rama in the company of Sita. Then, without any more delay, he got ready to consign his body to the flames, holding his mind absorbed in Rama. 7. He held his mind for long in meditation on that form of Rama—blue like Durva grass, lotus-eyed, dressed in tree-bark cloth, wearing matted locks, accompanied by Sita and Lakshmana, and established in the hearts of all. 8. He thought, "Lo! Who is there so merciful, so liberal to his devotees other than Rama? Wonder of wonders, he has, of his own accord, come here to bless me, intuiting how I have been constantly thinking about him. 9. Purified in mind and burning this body in fire, I shall attain the realm of Brahma in the very presence of Rama, the Supreme Being born as son of Dasaratha. 10. May Rama, the Lord of Ayodhya, ever dwell in my heart—Rama in whose lap is seated Sita like lightning in the clouds.” (11-12). Thus for a long time did he look at Rama standing in front of him and meditate on him in mind. Then setting fire to the pyre, he reduced his physical body to ashes, gained a divine body, and attained the realm of Brahma. Subsequently, a large number of ascetics inhabiting the Dandaka forest came to meet Rama at the hermitage of Sarabhanga.

Rama vows to extirpate the Rakshasas (13-24)

13. Seeing all those holy men, Rama,

Lakshmana and Sita, who had by the power of Maya assumed human forms and manners, saluted them all in haste by making full prostrations. 14. Pronouncing their blessings on Rama, the resident of the hearts of all, they said the following with joined palms to him, who was none but Hari, equipped with bow and arrow: (15-16). “We know Thee to be Mahavishnu, Sita to be Thy consort Lakshmi, Lakshmana to be Sesha and Bharata and his brother Satrughna to be Thy Conch and Discus. Beseeched by Brahma, Thou art incarnated in this world to rid the earth of its burdens. Therefore, it is among the principal objects of Thy mission to relieve the Rishis of their sorrows and difficulties. 17. O Rama! May Thou be pleased to come along with Sita and Lakshmana to see the forest inhabited by ascetics. We shall lead Thee to those places. When Thou seest the sights there and know our conditions of life, Thou wouldst be moved by a powerful impulse of mercy towards us.”

18. Being thus implored prayerfully by them, the all-powerful Rama went along with those ascetics to see their abodes.

19. In all those places Rama saw here and there many skeletons of human heads. At this sight, Rama asked: 20. "Whose are these skeletons of heads? How have they fallen here?" The ascetics replied, "Indeed they are the heads of Rishis. 21. When the ascetics are unconscious of the external world in the state of meditation, the Rakshasas eat their heads and throw the bones here and there. They do this carefully watching the time when the sages in meditation are unaware of the conditions outside." 22. Hearing these piteous words of the frightened Rishis and Munis, Rama then and there took the vow that he would destroy the whole tribe of Rakshasas there. (23-24). In this way the noble Rama of Raghu's line along with Sita and Lakshmana spent some years, seeing the Ashramas

At the Ashrama of Sutikshna (25-40)

25. In the course of those travels, one day he reached the Ashrama of the sage Sutikshna, which had a pleasant climate in all seasons, which yielded the benefits of every season always, and which was inhabited by a large number of Rishis.

26. Sutikshna was a disciple of the sage Agastya, and used to utter the sacred name of Rama always. Hearing about the arrival of Rama, he came himself, and moved by a great spirit of devotion which was manifest in his eyes, received him with due worship. Sutikshna said: 27. "O Rama, consort of Sita, and the delight of all! Thou art beyond the bounds of Knowledge and endowed with excellences that are limitless

Thy feet are sought after even by Parame-swara and Brahma. Thou art the one faultless boat for all Jivas to cross the ocean of Samsara. I am one given to the repetition of Thy holy Mantra and the servant of even Thy servants. 28. I am one bound by the cord of identification with the body, which is nothing but a mass of filthy stuff. I am consigned to the disused well of family life, centering on wife and children and other worldly relationships. Yet, Thou, who art beyond the knowledge of all beings in this universe, hast deigned to come here, seeking me of Thy own accord. 29. Though Thou art residing in the hearts of all, Thou hidest with Thy delusive power, the vision of those who are not disposed to take Thy name. But Maya's delusion does not affect those who are devoted to the repetition of Thy holy name. Just as in the case of the heavenly tree, the Kalpaka Vriksha, the fruits of Thy grace come to those who seek

Thee. 30. Thou art the one cause for the creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe. By assuming Maya with its three Gunas of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, Thou manifestest in a threefold way as Brahma, Vishnu and Maheswara. O Supreme One! As the one sun is reflected as many in different pots of water, so dost Thou assume different forms with different adjuncts. 31. O Rama! Thou, who transcendest the darkness of Tamas and who art the Ultimate Subject, has been pleased today to reveal Thyself before me as an object of perception. Though unseen by unholy ones, Thou dost indeed reveal Thyself to those whose hearts have been purified by Thy sacred name. 32. O Rama! Though formless, Thou hast assumed a form in association with Maya. I see Thee before me in such an assumed human form more handsome than countless Cupids—a form charming with a sweet smile that reveals a

My sole wealth and fortune, who art accompanied by Sita and served by Lakshmana the son of Sumitra, who art dressed in deer skin, who hast the brightness of a blue lotus who art very calm, who art the centre of countless excellences and who art the object of service and devotion to all disciplined persons. 34. O Rama! Let philosophers know Thee as transcending every kind of adjuncts like space and time and the luminosity of pure consciousness. But I, a devotee, aspire for nothing other than this form of Thine concretely present before me. May it shine in my consciousness at all times!"

35. To the sage Sutikshna who offered this hymn of praise, Rama said, smiling: "I know that by the adoration of Me, your heart has become very pure. (36-39). It is therefore that I have come to see you. There is no means other than devotion for realising Me. I reveal Myself always to those who repeat My Mantra, who seek shelter under Me without depending on anything or anyone else. The hymn that you have addressed Me is dear to Me. Whoever studies this hymn always, in them will be generated pure devotion and spiritual illumination. You have become free even in this world by your devotion to Me. After the fall of your body, you will attain Sayujya—liberation of becoming My very Being. There is no doubt about it. Now I desire to meet your teacher, the great sage Agastya. I am extremely desirous of living for some time in those precincts where that sage dwells."

(40-41). Sutikshna agreed to this proposal and said, "O Rama! We shall go there

AT THE ASHRAMA OF THE SAGE AGASTYA

Meeting with sage Agastya (1-16)

1. Towards noon, Rama along with Sutikshna, Sita and Lakshmana, reached the hermitage of the brother of Agastya, by name Agnijihwa. 2. That sage gave him a warm reception and fed him with roots and fruits. Rising up early next morning, they started for Agastya's Ashrama. (3-4). That hermitage was noted for the presence of fruits and flowers of all seasons. It was full of animals of various species and its atmosphere was filled with the sweet warblings of many kinds of birds. It resembled Nandana, the garden of Heaven. It was a resort of Brahma Rishis, Deva Rishis and resident ascetics. It filled one with a feeling that it was another Brahma-Loka. 5. Stopping outside the precincts of that Ashrama, Rama said to Sutikshna, "You please go in and announce that I have come. (6-9). Tell the sage that along with Sita and Lakshmana, I have come to see him." Saying that he would do so with great pleasure, Sutikshna entered the Ashrama of his teacher. There Sutikshna saw the sage sitting, surrounded by ascetics, especially by devotees of Rama, and expounding to these disciples the meaning of the sacred name of Rama. Sutikshna made full salutation to the sage by stretching his whole body at the feet of his Guru and announced: "O great and illumined sage! Rama, the son of Dasaratha, accompanied by Sita and Lakshmana, has arrived to see you. He is standing there with his palms joined in salutation to you."

(10-11). Agastya said, "Quickly bring here Rama, who is ever seated in my heart. May you prosper! I am staying here, ever meditating on him in my heart and ever aspiring to meet him." With these words, he got up from his seat, and along with the other ascetics, went to meet Rama in a spirit of great devotion and said: 12. "O Rama! Deign to come in. I am indeed fortunate to meet Thee now. Thou hast condescended to come here as my guest. This indeed is the day that marks the fulfilment of my life's objective." 13. Seeing the sage approaching them, Rama along with Sita and Lakshmana saluted him with overflowing joy, stretching themselves in salutation on the ground like sticks. 14. The great sage lifted Rama up and embraced him with great devotion. The bliss arising from contact with Rama's body expressed itself in a constant flow of tears from Agastya's eyes. 15. Holding Rama's hand with his own, that great sage took him to the Ashrama in a mood of high exaltation. 16. He gave him a comfortable seat and worshipped him in a very elaborate manner and fed him with several kinds of fruits and roots available in that forest.

Agastya's hymn (17-50).

17. Rama of moonlike face being now seated alone, the holy sage Agastya said as follows with palms joined in salutation: (18-19). "The day on which Brahma prayed to Thee on the shore of the Milk Ocean to relieve the earth of its burdens and to destroy Ravana, from that day I have been waiting here in expectation of Thy arrival. I have been staying with the ascetics of this place, performing austerities and constantly thinking about Thee in my eagerness to meet Thee. (20-22). Before the cycle of creation started, Thou alone didst exist with none else besides, unmodified, without any adjunct. There is Thy potency spoken of as Maya, which has no existence apart from Thee, and which was latent in Thy self with all the manifoldness and adjunct-potential in it. When that Power, on being assumed by Thee, manifests itself, the savants of Vedanta call it Avyakrita, the Unmanifested Whole. Some call it Mula-prakriti (Root-Nature), others as Maya (Mysterious Power), still others as Avidya (ignorance), and samshti (transmigratory cycle) and bandha (bondage). 23. Under Thy prompting, She (Maya) manifests Mahattatva (Great Element). Out of Mahattatva, under Thy stimulation, Ahamkara (the cosmic I-sense) evolves. 24. Ahamkara, which is an expression of Mahattatva, manifests itself in three aspects—the Sattvika aspect, the Rajasika aspect and the Tamasika aspect. 25. Out of Ahamkara dominated by Tamas, evolved the subtle essence of things (Tanmatra), and out of them in due order evolved the gross elements—Akasa (ether), Vayu (air), Agni (fire), Jala (water) and Bhumi, (earth). 26. Out of Rajasa-ahamkara was evolved the Indriyas (senses) and out of Sattvika-ahamkara, the Devatas (deities) and Manas (mind). By the combination of all these (evolutes) was formed the universal causal body (Linga), holding within it the whole potentiality of the universe. It is also called the Sutratma (the Pervading Self) and the Hiranyagarbha (Luminous Potentiality). 27. From the Hiranyagarbha manifested the Cosmic Whole (Virat), whose gross body consists of the whole universe, with all its moving and unmoving beings. 28. In the course of time or according to the manifestation of Karma potentialities, the Devas, men and the brute creations came into existence. Assuming the constituent of Rajas, Thou didst become Brahma, the creator of the universe. 29. Wise men say that assuming the constituent of Sattva, Thou art Vishnu, the Protector, and assuming Tamas Thou art also Rudra, the destroyer of the universe. Thus what are called the Trimurti, the Triune Being, is nothing but Thyself. 30. The three states of waking, dream and sleep, which are the three modes of Buddhi born of its constituents of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, are verily Thyself, O Rama. Thou art also the Pure Consciousness, changeless and transcendent, distinct from the Buddhi and its modes of three states, standing as their witness. 31. O the noblest of Raghu's line! When Thou willest to enact the play of creation, Thou assumest Thy Power Maya, and appearest as one endowed with the Gunas of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas (32-33). O Rama! Thy Maya has two aspects—Vidya (spiritual illumination) and Avidya (ignorance). Those who are devoted to works, Vedic and secular, are under the dominance of Avidya, while the followers of the path of renunciation, given to reflection on the purport of the Vedanta and the practice of devotion to Thee, are filled by the power of Vidya. 34. Those who are dominated by Avidya are ever consigned to the transmigratory cycle, while those devoted to Vidya become ever-free. 35. In this world, Vidya shines in those who have constant devotion to Thee and ever repeat Thy sacred name and reflect on it, but never in others devoid of devotion.

36. Therefore those who have devotion (Bhakti) are verily blessed with Mukti (liberation), while those devoid of that immortal excellence of devotion can never hope to experience Moksha (freedom from Samsara) even in dream.

37. "What is the good of speaking too much, O Rama? I shall place before Thee the most essential requirement of devotional life. Contact with holy men (Sadhus) is the one essential means for the attainment of Moksha. (38-40). A Sadhu (a true holy man) is one in whom the following excellences are found: even-mindedness towards all including friend, enemy and neutral; desirelessness; control of the senses in respect of external objects; abandonment of the three eshanas (desire for children, for wealth, and for heavenly enjoyment); placidity of mind arising from complete self-mastery; supreme devotion to Thee; equanimity of mind in success and failure; absence of all attachments; abandonment of all evil and selfish actions; abiding interest in contemplating on Brahman; the practice of Yama and other disciplines of

Yoga; and satisfaction with whatever means of livelihood that comes spontaneously without seeking. Such are the characteristics of holy men. Intimate contact with them gives rise to delight in matters dealing with the Divine excellences and accounts. (41-43). When such delight is established in the mind, loving devotion to God (Bhakti) is generated. Devotion gives rise to clear and comprehensive realisation of the Divine. This is the royal road to Mukti adopted by men of sound discernment. Therefore, O Rama, may I ever have Bhakti characterised by intense love of Thee! May I, O Hari, particularly have contact with holy men completely devoted to Thee. My life's purpose has been attained today by this meeting I am having with Thee. 44. Today all the Vedic rituals I have practised have come to their fruition. Long have I been practising austerities without any other thought in my mind except Thee. O Rama! The blessing I have got today through this opportunity to offer adoration to Thee in this form as the Incarnate, is the result of all the disciplines and austerities I have practised. 45. May Thou dwell in my heart with Sita for ever. And May the remembrance of Thee occur constantly in my mind in all conditions, whether I am engaged in some work or am resting!"'

(46-47). Adoring Rama, the consort of Ramā in this way, the great Rishi Agastya presented to him a bow which Indra had entrusted him with for the purpose of being handed over to Rama. He also gave him a quiver that is never exhausted of arrows and a sword studded with gems and said,"O scion of Raghu's line! Destroy with these the tribe of Rakshasas who have become a burden to this earth. It is for this purpose that Thou hast incarnated in a human body.

48. About two Yojanas from here, there is an Ashrama named Panchavati on the banks of the river Gautami, surrounded by a sacred forest. O noblest of the descendants of Raghu! You can spend the rest of your forest life in that place. 49.

O protector of holy men! There you can accomplish many objectives for the benefit of the Devas."

50. Rama, who was none but the all-knowing and all-powerful Hari, having heard the very meaningful hymn of Agastya and the guidance given by him, went away highly satisfied in the direction shown by the sage.

Chapter 4
TOWARDS PANCHAVATI

Meeting with Jatayu (1-15)

1. While travelling along the path shown by the sage Agastya, Rama and party came across the aged eagle Jatayu, mountain-like in size and wondrous in appearance.
2. Thereupon Rama said: "O Lakshmana, get my bow. What is standing before us must be one of those Rakshasas eating up the Rishis. He deserves to be killed."
3. Frightened to hear those words of Rama, that king of the eagles said, "I do not deserve to be killed by you, O Rama! I am a close friend of your father. (4-7) am the eagle named Jatayu. Desirous of serving you, I shall stay in Panchavati itself. If ever you and Lakshmana both happen to go into the forest to hunt, I shall guard and protect Sita, the daughter of Janaka." Hearing these words of the eagle, Rama said with great affection, "O King of eagles! Your words are praiseworthy. Please stay in this forest itself not very far off from my residence, and help me whenever I want." 8. Addressing these words to the eagle and embracing him, the great Lord Rama, the delight of the Raghus, moved on with Lakshmana and Sita.

9. Reaching the bank of the river Gautami (Godavari), there in the region called Panchavati, Lakshmana built a roomy cottage for the party to stay. (10-13). That place was situated on the northern bank of the Godavari, away from the madding crowds and surrounded by a thick growth of fruit-bearing trees like Kadamba, Panasa and Amra. Delighting Sita, Rama stayed there as immortals in heaven along with Lakshmana of deep insight. Lakshmana devoted himself to the service of Rama in every way. Every day he went out and collected the roots and fruits of the forest and fed Rama with them. At night he kept vigil with bow and arrow in hand, protecting the residence of Rama. 14. All the three of them went every day for their ablutions to the Godavari. While going for, and returning from, bath, Rama and Lakshmana walked in front and behind with Sita in the middle. 15. With great joy Lakshmana brought the water required for their use. Thus the three lived in great happiness.

Rama's sermon to Lakshmana (16-55)

was sitting in solitude, Lakshmana approached him in due form and humility and questioned him. 17. He said "O Lotus-eyed One, all-knowing and all-powerful! I wish to know from Thee the sure means for the attainment of Moksha. Deign to expound it to me in brief. 18. O the leader of Raghu's line! Deign to impart to me Jnana (knowledge) together with Vijnana (realisation of spiritual truth) augmented by devotion and renunciation of worldly values. In the world there is none other than Thee to expound this recondite theme."

19. Rama replied: "O dear brother! Listen. I shall speak to you on the most profound of all doctrines which frees one immediately from delusions of the figments of imagination. (20-24). First I shall expound to you the nature of Maya. Next I shall describe the steps that lead to knowledge (Jnana), and after that to Vijnana or knowledge accompanied with realisation, and to the Supreme Self (the Paramatman). The Paramatman is the object of the spiritual aspirant's quest. By knowing him one is released from Bhaya—fear consisting in the repeated experience of death and birth in Samsara. That by the power of which one falsely feels the sense of selfhood with regard to the body-mind, which in reality is not the Self at all—that is Maya. This Samsara, based on the false identification, is entirely a creation of Maya. O noble one! Maya is traditionally accepted as having two aspects—Vikshepa (projection) and Avarana (covering up). The whole of the objective universe in its gross and subtle form, embracing everything from the Mahattatva (all-comprehending category) to the Cosmic Being (Brahmā) is super-imposed by the power (Sakti) known as Vikshepa. The other aspect of Avidya known as Avarana (covering power) completely covers up the real nature of Pure Consciousness and thus paves the way for the superimposition of this multifarious universe on Pure Consciousness by Maya (or the Vikshepa aspect of it). (25-26). On discriminating, the world of multiplicity is found only to be a product of delusion and not really existent, just like the rope experienced as snake. All that men constantly hear, see and remember—it is all unreal, just like the contents of a dream or imagination. The body is the firm root of the tree of Samsara.

27. "It is because of the body that connection with wife and children and other members of the family is established. No other form of connection with these can be traced between them and oneself. The Atman does not in any way need them. (28-29). The body-mind is a combination of several factors. The five gross elements, the five subtle elements, the 'I' sense (Ahamkara), intellect (Buddhi), the ten senses, mind (Manas) which is a reflection of Pure Consciousness, Root-Nature (Mula-Prakriti)—the combination of all these is what is called Kshetra, also known as the body. 30. The Jiva is distinct from this complex described above. He is the Spirit (Paramatman), free from happiness and sorrow. I shall now tell you the means by which the truth about the Jiva could be ascertained.

ymous. There is no difference between these. Therefore, do not entertain identification with the body as oneself. Avoid fraud, oppression and infliction of pain on other beings. Bear with fortitude the criticisms and persecutions of others. Be without crookedness. Be devoted to a true teacher and serve him with mind, speech and body. Observe purity, mental and physical. Be steady in the performance of virtuous acts. Control your mind, speech and body. Have no longing for sense objects. Be free from egotism. Be always aware of the evils of birth, old age etc. Be non-attached to sons, wife etc.; avoid cherishing towards them affection that partakes of partiality. Be equanimous when desirable and undesirable experiences come. Have constant devotion to Me, Rama, who is the soul of all beings. Do not concern your mind with matters that are not spiritual; resort to holy places that are free from crowds of men. Never feel attraction for the company of worldly-minded people. Let the search for the Atman be your sole quest. Always be reflecting in your mind about the truth of scriptural dicta. The practice of these disciplines will lead to Jnana, the knowledge of the Spirit. In their absence, the result will be the contrary.

38. "Jnana (knowledge of the Spirit) is that knowledge by which one gets certitude that the real 'I' is distinct from Buddhi, Prana, Ahamkara (I-sense), Manas (Mind) and body, but is, on the other hand, one with Pure Consciousness, eternal, pure and wakeful. 39. When this conviction becomes a constant realisation or actuality, that is called Vijnana (Enlightenment). 40. The Atman infills everything. He is of the nature of Pure Consciousness and Bliss. He has no destruction. He is free from attachment, aversion etc., which are the characteristics of His adjuncts like Buddhi. He is free from all transformations (which are characteristics of the products of Prakriti and its evolutes). 41. It is He who endows the body-mind with consciousness and Himself stands self-revealed. He is the One with out a second whose existence can never be covered up or sublated. Truth, consciousness etc., are his characteristics. (42-47). This Eternal Witness, unrelated to anything and self-revealing, comes to be understood through realisation. When, through the instruction of the scripture and the teacher, the understanding of unity of the individual Self with the Supreme Self dawns on the mind of an aspirant, then the root-ignorance (Mula-avidya) along with its cause and its effects dissolve into the Supreme Self. That state is called Mukti (Liberation). O scion of Raghu's line! I have expounded to you My true nature along with the teachings regarding its knowledge and its realisation. All this doctrine about bondage and liberation is secondary. (They are not actual; for the Atman is ever-free). But this Supreme Truth about the Atman never dawns in the minds of people who are without devotion to Me. At night, in darkness, even men with eyes cannot see their foot-steps. When they are provided with light they can see it. Even like that, to those who have devotion to Me, the Atman shines. I shall, therefore, tell you now some of those factors that generate devotion to Me.

(48-50). "Association with My devotees, adoring service of Me, constant service of My devotees, observance of the vow of Ekadasi and the like, keen interest in listening to, reading and exposition of accounts of, My excellences, adherence to My ceremonial worship, repetition of My name and hymning about my attributes-those who are constantly devoted to these disciplines gain unshakable devotion to Me. What else is there to gain than this? 51. Therefore, one who is endowed with devotion to me attains knowledge, non-attachment and enlightenment quickly. Thereby he attains Mukti (liberation). 52. In accordance with your questions I have expounded to you all these Truths. One who remembers and follows these teachings becomes fit to attain Mukti. 53. You should never impart these teachings even under compulsion to those who have no trace of devotion to Me, but you must impart them to My devotees, even calling them to your side. 54. Whoever studies this daily, with faith and devotion succeeds in shattering the thick darkness of Ignorance and attaining liberation. 55. Whoever is devoted to Me, practises communion with Me, is pure in heart and calm in mind, delights in the service of Me, understands the nature of the Self to be purity, is devoid of attachments and is ever striving in the spiritual path—to such a person whose mind never goes to anything other than the service of holy men and holy causes, Moksha is an achievement already in hand. They become fit to see My presence always and everywhere. There is no other way for this attainment.

SURPANAKHA'S MUTILATION

Surpanakha's arrival (1-17)

1. In those days, in the thick forest that surrounded Janasthana, there moved about a Rakshasa woman of enormous strength who had the capacity to assume any form she liked. (2-3). On a certain day this Rakshasa woman noticed on the banks of the Godavari the foot-prints of Rama, the Lord of the universe, with marks of Lotus, Vajra (diamond weapon) and Ankusa (hook). Seeing the extremely handsome nature of these foot-prints, she was struck with passionate love for the one to whom they belonged. So following the track of these foot-prints she arrived at the abode of Rama. 4-5. Seeing there, in the company of Sita, the Cupid-like Rama, the consort of Lakshmi, this Rakshasa woman with intensified passion for him, asked him, "Whose son are you? What's your name? Why do you stay in the Ashrama donning tree-bark clothes and matted locks? What are you going to attain by staying here? 6. I am a Rakshasa woman named Surpanakha, who can assume any form I like. I am a sister of the great Ravana, the lord of the Rakshasas. 7. I am staying in this forest along with Khara, my brother. Our king Ravana has assigned this whole forest to me. I stay here eating up all the ascetics I come across. (8-10). I desire to be acquainted with you. O eloquent one! Tell me everything about yourself." To her Rama replied, "I am known as Rama, the son of the King of Ayodhya. This beautiful woman is my wife Sita, the daughter of Janaka. The other person with me is my handsome younger brother Lakshmana. Now, O beauty-queen of the whole universe! What do you want of me? Speak out." Hearing these words of Rama, that love-lorn Rakshasa woman said in reply: 11. "O Rama! Come along with me. We shall have a very enjoyable time, moving about in this forest. I, who am in the grip of passion, cannot remain separated from you, O lotus-eyed one!"

(12-14). Casting a meaningful sidelong glance at Sita, Rama replied to that woman with a smile, "Here is this handsome woman, my wife who never remains separated from me. So you will have to be only a co-wife which will be intolerable to you. Here outside is my brother Lakshmana, who is very handsome in appearance. He will be a fitting husband for you. You enjoy life with him moving about in this forest." At these words of Rama, Surpanakha turned towards Lakshmana and said, "O handsome one! Be pleased to be my husband. According to the command of your brother, we both shall be united. Let there be no delay." Moved by intense sexual passion, that fierce Rakshasi said thus to Lakshmana.

(16-17). Lakshmana now said to her, "O good woman! I am only a servant of that highly intelligent person, Rama. Do you want to become a servant woman? What is more pitiable than that? So, you go to Rama again for your own good. He is the king and the lord of all." Hearing this, that evil-minded woman approached Rama again.

Surpanakha's mutilation and destruction of Khara (18-37)

(18-22). In great anger she said, "O Rama, fickle-minded as you are, why are you teasing me like this? Now itself, in your very presence, I shall devour this Sita, who is at the bottom of all this mischief." With these words, she rushed towards

Sita, assuming a fierce form. Thereupon, on the orders of Rama, the powerful Lakshmana cut off her ears and nose with a sword. As blood flowed all over her body, that Rakshasa woman gave out a fierce howl. Shrieking and uttering abusive words, she went and fell before the Rakshasa Khara of fierce speech. He thereupon asked her, "How has this happened? This atrocity must have been done on you by one who is almost in the mouth of death. I am going to kill him, even if he be as powerful as Kala." (23-25). That Rakshasi, thereupon replied, "Rama, along with Sita and Lakshmana, is staying on the banks of the Godavari with the idea of making this forest of Dandaka free of fear for men. His brother Lakshmana, directed by him, has done this to me. If you are a man of a great family and a hero, you go and kill those two enemies. I shall drink their blood and you eat the bodies of those audacious men. If you do not do this, I shall give up my body and go to the abode of Yama."

(26-28). The words of Surpranakha drove Khara into a fit of anger. He quickly started on an expedition. With an army of ferocious Rakshasas, fourteen thousand strong, he started for the destruction of Rama, accompanied by the Rakshasa leaders Trisiras and Dushana, all holding various kinds of weapons ready to strike. Hearing the tumultuous uproar produced by this army, Rama said to Lakshmana: (29-31). "A terrific sound is audible. It is certain that the Rakshasas are on the move. There is going to be a fierce fight between them and me. O powerful Lakshmana! Taking Sita, you go to the neighbouring cave for shelter. You remain there and I shall destroy all these Rakshasas of terror-inspiring forms. Don't say anything against this directive of mine. You are vowed to obey my words." Agreeing to this proposal, Lakshmana, leading Sita, went to the cave. 32. And lordly Rama tying up his cloth and hair, stood there ready with his terrible bow in hand and his inexhaustible quiver tied to his back. 33. The Rakshasas reached the spot quickly and they began to shower on Rama various kinds of weapons, rocks and trees. (34-35). Rama in reply cut all those missiles into shreds. With a thousand arrows, he killed all those Rakshasas, including the three leaders, Khara, Trisiras and Dushana within a short period of half a Yama. 36. Lakshmana, now led Sita back from the cave to Rama's presence. Seeing the number of Rakshasas killed, all were astonished. 37. Sita embraced Rama, with a face shinning like a full-blown lotus. She rubbed and healed the wounds on Rama's body with her hands.

Surpanakha's Representation to Ravana (38-61)

(38-42). Seeing all those leading Rakshasas dead, Surpanakha, the sister of Ravana, rushed to Lanka. Crying aloud, she went into the royal assembly of Ravana and fell flat on the floor. Seeing his sister in such a frightened and distressed condition, Ravana said, "Dear sister, get up, get up. Who is it that mutilated you in this way? Be it Indra, Yama, Varuna or Kubera—tell me their name, and within a moment I shall reduce them to ashes." The Rakshasa woman, Surpanakha now replied to him, "You are a heedless fool given to drinking and the company of women. You are as good as a eunuch. That is what your conduct reveals. How can you call yourself a king, when you do not have an efficient system for gathering information? (43-44) Khara, Dushana and Trisiras have all been killed in battle and an army of fourteen thousand Rakshasas destroyed by Rama, the sworn enemy of Rakshasas. The whole of Janasthana has now been made a safe abode for ascetics. You have not known any of these events. It is therefore that I stigmatise you as a fool."

Hearing this, Ravana enquired: 45. "Who is this Rama? Why has he killed all these Rakshasas? Tell me everything about it. I shall cause the total destruction of these enemies." Surpanakha then said: (46-47). "Recently I happened to go to Janasthana on the banks of the Godavari. In that region is located Panchavati, a place formerly inhabited by ascetics. At that place, I happened to meet Rama, handsome and lotus-eyed, equipped with bow and arrows, and donning tree-bark clothes and matted locks. (48-49). Equipped just like himself, there was by his side, his younger brother Lakshmana. With Rama, there was also his wife, an unparalleled beauty, the like of whom you will not find among the Devas, Gandharvas or men. O King! She looks veritably like another Sri and her presence illumines the forest. (50-54). O sinless one! I tried to get that women over here to be your wife, but Lakshmana, at the order of his brother cut off my nose and ears. Crying in great pain and distress, I approached Khara. He came with his army of Rakshasas to punish Rama, but the whole of that fierce and courageous army of Rakshasas was destroyed by that powerful man Rama. It seems to me that if he makes up his mind, Rama can reduce the whole world to ashes in half a moment. Now if that woman could be got as your wife, your life will really become fruitful. (55-56). O great King! You have now got to take steps to somehow secure the lotus-eyed Sita, the most noted among the world beauties, as your wife. But, O my Lord and King! You won't be able to do it directly by facing Rama. You will have to hoodwink him by some magical strategem and then approach her."

57. Hearing this representation of his sister, Ravana consoled her with good words and presents. He then went to his residential quarters. Immersed in thought, he could not get sleep that night. He thought: 58. "How is it that Khara, with his army, was destroyed by Rama, a mere man? Proud of his own strength and courage as he was, it is a wonder to me that my brother Khara could thus be destroyed by Rama. 59. In all probability, Rama may not be a mere man. He may be that Supreme Being, who has now

If I am killed by the Supreme Self, I shall reign in the Supreme Realm of Vaikuntha. If I am not killed, I shall be enjoying this realm of the Rakshasas for a long time. So, I am going to oppose Rama." 61. Reflecting in this way, that lord of the Rakshasas concluded that Rama must be Hari, the Supreme Lord, and resolved within himself, "I shall attain to Him through the attitude of confrontation; for, the Lord does not reveal himself quickly by ordinary forms of Bhakti (devotion)."

THE COMMISSIONING OF MAREECHA

Ravana at Mareecha's Abode (1-14).

(1-3). Reflecting thus at night, the intelligent Ravana made some resolutions in his mind. Ascending his chariot (the aerial vehicle Pushpaka), he went to the other side of the ocean, where the Rakshasa Mareecha was staying. There, Mareecha, donning tree-bark cloth and matted locks like an ascetic, was contemplating in his heart on that Supreme Being, who though transcending the Gunas of Prakriti, is yet reflected in the Gunas. After he obtained external consciousness from the depths of Samadhi, he saw Ravana who had arrived at his abode. 4. He got up from his seat immediately, embraced Ravana, received him in the proper form, and did him hospitality. After giving him a comfortable seat, Mareecha said to Ravana: (5-6). "O Ravana! How is it that you have come alone in a chariot? Your face reflects that you are caught up in some worrying train of thoughts. If it is not a secret, reveal to me what it is. O great King! If it is anything righteous and not attended by sinful consequences, I shall accomplish what is dear to you."

Now Ravana said: 7. "You must know of a famous King of Ayodhya by name Dasaratha. His eldest son Rama is noted for his truthfulness and heroism. 8. King Dasaratha has sent this son of his, along with his wife and his brother Lakshmana, to the forest, which is the abode of ascetics and forest-dwellers. 9. He is now staying in an Ashrama at Panchavati amidst a dense fear-inspiring forest. He has a handsome wife Sita, who can be the beauty queen of the world. 10. He is now staying fearlessly in the forest after killing my courageous army of Rakshasas including Khara, who were absolutely guiltless in this affair. 11. This wicked fellow Rama has also cut off the nose and ears of my innocent sister Surpanakha, and yet is staying fearlessly in this forest. 12. With your help, I shall manage to remove Rama from that region of the forest, and then, while he is away, abduct his wife. 13. Assuming the form of an illusory deer, you should attract Rama and Lakshmana away from their Ashrama. Taking that opportunity, I shall carry away Sita. 14. And after you have done me that much of service, you can come back and live as you are now doing." Mareecha was astounded to hear these words of Ravana and he gazed at him in wonder.

Conversation between Ravana and Mareecha (15-29)

Mareecha replied: 15. Who is it that has given you this advice, which, if carried out, will bring about our total destruction? He must certainly be an enemy of ours, deserving slaughter. He must be devising a way for your destruction. (16-18). Even as a boy, when he came for giving protection to the sacrificial rites of Viswamitra, Rama, with a single arrow, hurled me into the ocean over a distance of a hundred Yojanas. O Ravana! Thinking of Rama's prowess, my mind gets overpowered by fear even now. Remembering those incidents, I am apprehending the presence of Rama everywhere out of fear. 19. Even afterwards, retaining in mind my old enmity towards him, I went one day to the Dandaka forest in the form of a deer with sharp horns, surrounded by many other deer like myself. 20. With a view to kill him, I rushed towards Rama, who was in the company of Sita and Lakshmana. Seeing me approaching, he sent one arrow at me. 21. Struck by that arrow, O king of the Rakshasas, I was thrown into the ocean whirling. After that, I have in great fear taken shelter in this secluded place. 22. Withdrawing myself from all objects of enjoyments, I am living here, constantly thinking of Rama out of fear. Not only that, I shake with fear even on hearing words indicating objects of enjoyments beginning with 'R'—words like Raja, Ratna, Ramani, Ratha, etc; for the very sound 'R', with which Rama's name begins, fills me with dread. (23-24). I have abandoned all external enterprises, fearing that Rama may come at me anywhere at any moment. Constantly thinking of Rama, when sleep overcomes me, I see Rama in dream, and getting awakened, I am spending sleepless nights sitting. Therefore, O great one! You abandon your designs against Rama and go home. 25. Do not be the cause of the destruction of the tribe of Rakshasas, whom you have raised to a state of great prosperity for a very long period. Accept my advice which is given in good faith for your own welfare. Give up your enmity towards Rama, who is Paramatma Himself. Seek him with true devotion. He is supremely merciful. 26. I have known everything about certain secret matters from the words of the sage Narada. In the Satya Yuga, the Supreme Being Hari had given word to Brahma that He would grant his prayers to him. 27. Brahma had said to Hari, 'O

Lotus-eyed one! Born in the world of men as the son of Dasaratha, deign to destroy the ten-headed Ravana, our enemy.' 28. Therefore know that Rama is not a mere man. He is the Eternal Being Narayana who by His mysterious power Maya has assumed the form of a man and come to the forest. He is not afraid of any one. 29. He has incarnated in order to relieve the earth of her burden. So, O dear one, return home, giving up your present enterprise." Hearing these words of Mareecha, Ravana replied:

Mareecha assumes the Form of a Golden Deer (30-41)

He said: (30-31). "If Rama is really the Supreme Being come on earth as man at Brahma's imploring in order to kill me, he will accomplish it easily, whatever you may do. For whatever God wills, comes to pass. Therefore by hook or by crook I will take away Sita from Rama. 32. O bold one! You know that if I die in battle, I shall attain the highest heaven. If I succeed in killing Rama in battle, I can enjoy Sita without the fear of a rival. (33-35). Therefore, O respected one, get ready. You are to attract Rama and Lakshmana to a far off distance from their Ashrama by assuming the form of an attractive magical deer. After that you can return and stay happily in retirement as now. If you speak a single word of intimidation to me, I shall cut off your head even now with my sword." Hearing these words of Ravana, Mareecha thought within himself: (36-37). "If Rama happens to kill me, I shall obtain freedom from this transmigratory cycle. But if I meet with death at the hands of this wicked fellow, I am sure to be consigned to hell." Thus preferring death at Rama's hands, Mareecha got up immediately and said to Ravana: "O great King! I shall do as you command."

(38-40). With these words he ascended a chariot and soon went to the place where Rama's Ashrama was situated. Then in the neighbouring forest he moved about as a silver-spotted deer of golden colour, having horns of gems, eyes of sapphire, hoofs of pearls, the brightness of lightning, and a face of great attractiveness. Moving about in that way, he reached the precincts of Rama's Ashrama and attracted the notice of Sita. 41. While moving about, he would now run a little and then stop for a while; coming near, he would run away a little distance, as if out of fear. Thus captivating Sita's mind, that evil fellow of a Rakshasa moved about in the guise of a magical deer.

ABDUCTION OF SITA

The Destruction of Mareecha (1-25)

(1-3). Rama, divining beforehand the designs of Ravana, had called Sita alone one day and said to her: "O daughter of Janaka! Listen to my words. Ravana is going to approach you in the form of an ascetic for holy alms. Therefore you substitute in the Ashrama a magically created double of yours, and stationing her outside the Ashrama, you go in and hide yourself in fire in an invisible form. As desired by me you have to remain thus hidden for one year. When Ravana has been killed, you will join me again." 4. Following this instruction of Rama, Sita projected outside a magical double of hers, and hid herself in fire.

5. Now the magical Sita saw the magical deer, and laughing in wonder at its sight, approached Rama and said to him in a humble tone: 6. "See, see! Here is a wonderful wild deer, spotted, many-coloured and bejewelled. It is moving about everywhere fearlessly. Be pleased to capture it and give it to me to be taken care of as an attractive pet animal by me." 7. Rama agreed to do so, and getting ready to start, took his bow in hand and said to Lakshmana: "Keep careful guard over my dear wife, Sita. 8. In the forest there are many terrible Rakshasas who are adepts in deception by magic. You have therefore got to be very vigilant in this matter. In every way protect the virtuous and devoted Sita." 9. But Lakshmana thereupon said to Rama, "O noble one, this is only Mareecha disguised as a deer. There is no doubt about it.

For, a deer of this kind can occur nowhere." To this Rama said in reply: 10. "If it is Mareecha, I shall certainly kill him. If it is really a deer, I shall capture it for the entertainment of Sita. 11. I am anyway starting now, but shall return soon with the captured animal. You please guard Sita vigilantly."

(12-15). After instructing in this way Rama followed the magical deer (Maya-mriga)—Rama who is the support of the cosmic magic called Maya, which is world-bewitching and which manifests as the universe. In spite of being the Pure Spirit, self-fulfilled and changeless, he followed the deer for pleasing Sita, though knowing that the deer was really Mareecha. He did all this only to fulfil the dictum that the Supreme Lord is ever gracious to His devotees. (For Mareecha was a devotee who wanted death at his hand as a means of salvation, and Ravana too was one of those two devotees, Jaya and Vijaya, who were under a curse and were awaiting death at Rama's hands.) Otherwise, what significance has a deer or a woman got for that self-fulfilled and illumined being?

(16-17). Now appearing near, next running away and disappearing, now again emerging at a distance and next disappearing, the deer managed to draw Rama to a considerable distance. Rama now became convinced that that deer must really be an Asura and struck it with an arrow. Then the real Mareecha fell down in his natural form in a pool of blood. 18. While falling, he cried out in a voice resembling that of Rama, "Alas! Alas! O powerful Lakshmana! I am dying. Come quickly and save me."

(19-20). By merely uttering Rama's name at the time of death, Jivas attain to Him, Sri Hari. Then what glorious state must have been attained by that Asura who met with death at His hand and with His physical presence within his sight

To their utter astonishment, the Devas and all others who witnessed the scene saw a brilliance emerging from the body of the dead Rakshasa and entering into Rama.

(21-25). The Devas began talking among themselves, "By what meritorious work has this sinful Rakshasa, a killer of ascetics, attained to this highest spiritual state? Nothing but Rama's greatness can account for this. He has now been killed by Rama's arrows. Before this he has been thinking of Rama constantly. Out of fear of him, he had abandoned home, wealth etc. and was constantly engaged in the thought of Rama. Having thus burnt up all his sins, he has been fortunate to meet with death at the hands of Rama while seeing Him before, with his own eyes.

"Whether one is a Brahmana or a Rakshasa, whether one is a sinner or a righteous man—if one dies remembering Rama, one attains to the Supreme Status." Speaking to one another like this, the Devas went to their abode.

Sita's harsh Words to Lakshmana (26-37)

(26-27). Rama now began to think: "The dying Asura was heard to cry out 'Ah! Lakshmana!' imitating my voice. Why did he do so? What will Sita think on hearing that voice resembling mine?" With such worrying thoughts, Rama hastened to cover the distance and reach back his Ashrama.

(28-31). Meantime in their Ashrama, the dying cry of Mareecha provoked great fear and sorrow in the mind of Sita. She said to Lakshmana: "O Lakshmana! go quickly. Your brother seems to be in danger from the Asura. Didn't you hear his distressed cry, 'Ah Lakshmana!'" Lakshmana tried to console her: "O noble lady! That cry of distress cannot be that of Rama. It must be of some dying Rakshasa. For, if Rama is angry, he is capable of destroying the three worlds in no time. How can He who receives the adoration of even celestials utter a cry of distress?"

(32-34). At these words of Lakshmana, Sita, angry and weeping, looked at him and said, "O vicious fellow! I see, you want to see Rama killed. You have been prompted to come with us by that Bharata who wants to see Rama destroyed. You have come planning to possess me on Rama's death. But know for certain that you shall never get me. Look, I am going to end my life immediately. Rama is unaware that your intention is to steal his wife. I shall not touch any male other than Rama, whether it be you or Bharata." (35-37). Speaking in this vein, she beat her body with her own hands and wept. These harsh words cut Lakshmana to the quick, and closing his ears with his hand, he said with a heart full of sorrow: "Don't speak like that, O angry woman! Your vulgar speech will recoil on yourself. Your ruin is near at hand." With these words, entrusting Sita to the protection of the forest deities, Lakshmana went reluctantly in search of Rama in an extremely sorrow-stricken mood.

Ravana abducting Sita (38-66)

(38-40). Now taking advantage of this opportune moment, Ravana appeared before Sita, in the disguise of a mendicant with a fine Yogi's rod and water vessel in hand. Seeing him, Sita quickly made prostration before him. She adored him respectfully and offered him fruits and roots. Welcoming him she said, "O holy one! Please accept these fruits and roots and rest here for a while. In a short time my husband will be returning, and he will do you hospitality. So if you have time, please wait here for a while.” 41. At this the mendicant said: “O lotus-eyed one! Who are you? Who is your husband? Why are you staying in the forest resorted to by Rakshasas? O good lady! Please enlighten me on these matters, and then I shall tell you everything about myself.”

Sita said in reply: (42-44). “There was a great and famous king named Dasaratha ruling over Ayodhya. His eldest son, possessed of all excellences, is Rama. I, the daughter of Janaka, am his wife. Lakshmana is his dear brother. As ordered by his father, Rama has come to the forest to stay here for fourteen years. Now I would like to know something about you.”

The mendicant thereupon said: (45-46). “I am Ravana, a scion of Pulasthya’s line and the king of all the Rakshasas. I am passionately infatuated with you, and I have come to take you away to my palace. Of what use to you is Rama who has taken to an ascetic’s way of life? Come with me, and enjoy life with me. Don’t remain any longer amidst this harsh forest life.”

(47-49). Frightened by these words of Ravana, Sita spoke a few words in reply. She said: “Words of the kind you have spoken to me now, will attract the penalty of death at Rama’s hands. He will soon arrive with his brother. You wait for a while. Your threat to carry me away—me who am the consort of Hari Himself—is as ridiculous as a hare seeking to carry away the wife of a Hari (lion). Soon will you fall down on the earth, pierced by the arrows of Rama.”

50. At these words of Sita, Ravana, roused to a fit of violent wrath, now revealed his true form, resembling a mountain in stature, ten-headed and twenty-armed, and sombre like the dark blue cloud of the rainy season. (51-56). The forest-deities and other beings to whom Lakshmana had entrusted Sita, fled away at the very sight of that form. Ravana now scooped up the ground on which Sita was standing, and placing that block of earth along with Sita in his aerial car, hastened through the sky. Sita, shivering with terror and looking down towards the earth, kept on crying aloud, "Ah Rama! Ah Lakshmana!" Hearing the mournful cries of Sita, the eagle Jatayu, a leader of the tribe of birds, rose up from his arboreal home, and challenged Ravana with the words, "Stop, stop, you are stealing away the wife of the Lord of the worlds from their empty Ashrama, as a dog carries away the offerings prepared for a sacrifice. You cannot pass me unchallenged." With these words Jatayu with his sharp beak and claws attacked Ravana, killing the horses of the chariot and shattering his bow and vehicle. 57. Thereupon Ravana gave up his hold of Sita, and taking a sword in great anger, severed the eagle's wings with it. (58-62). The king of the birds fell on the earth, with a little consciousness still left in him. Meanwhile, Sita kept on crying aloud, saying, "O Rama, lord of the earth! Don't you see me utterly distracted with sorrow? Save your wife, O scion of Raghu's line, from being abducted by this Rakshasa. O worshipful Lakshmana! Forgive me, forgetting my transgression. I railed at you with a volley of unspeakable words. Pardon me for the same." Afraid of Rama's arrival, Ravana put the weeping Sita in another vehicle, and moved on with the speed of wind. (63-64). While going through the sky the lotus-faced Sita kept on gazing below towards to the earth, and saw on the top of a mountain five monkeys assembled together. She tied up her jewels in a half of her upper cloth, and threw this bundle down to reach the monkeys, so that they might tell Rama about her, if they happened to meet him.

65. And as for Ravana, he crossed the sea and reached Lanka with Sita. He took her to his residential palace, and lodged her amidst a guard of Rakshasa women in an Ashoka grove, situated at a very sequestered region. He protected her, as one would do one's mother (mātṛbudhyā).

(It is pointed out that Ravana was at heart a devotee, and that the attitude of a lust-infatuated abductor adopted by him was only a cloak he put on to hasten his death at the hands of Rama. It is parallel to Rama assuming the role of a man and undergoing all travails while in reality he was always the Supreme Being Himself).

66. Lean, miserable, untrimmed, and frightened to the core, Sita stayed amidst those Rakshasa women, with signs of complete dejection on her face and uttering piteous cries of "O Rama! O Rama!" frequently.

SALVATION OF JATAYU

Rama in Search of Sita (1-2)

(1-2). After destroying Mareecha capable of assuming any form by his mastery of deluding magic, Rama was on his way returning to the Ashrama when he saw at some distance Lakshmana coming towards him, with a face faded and miserable looking. At his sight, Rama, the great one, thought as follows: 3. "Lakshmana does not know that I have created a magical Sita and replaced the real one with her. I know the truth, but still, I shall practise a deception on him by imitating the sorrow-stricken pose of an ignorant, worldly man. 4. If I were to remain quiet in the Ashrama, there will be no occasion for the destruction of countless Rakshasas. 5. So I shall behave like a grief-stricken lover on this occasion. This will lead us to institute a search for Sita and in the end take us to the habitat of the Rakshasas. (6-8). After destroying Ravana with all his tribe, I shall bring out the real Sita from the fire in which I have hidden her, and return to Ayodhya in great joy. At Brahma's request I have assumed the form and ways of a man, and shall continue to do so for some time more. These activities of mine in the disguise of a man shall become in future a subject of study for the followers of the path of devotion and provide an easy means for the attainment of Mukti." Resolving thus, Rama, on meeting Lakshmana, said to him, 9. "Why have you come away, leaving my dear wife Sita alone? The Rakshasas might have taken her away or eaten her up." (10-13). Lakshmana, with tears in his eyes and hands joined in humble salutation reported to him about the very unseemly words spoken by Sita. He said: "When Sita heard the Rakshasa's cry 'Alas Lakshmana!' in a voice resembling yours, she asked me to come to your help without any delay. To her who was weeping, I said, comforting her, 'Good lady! These are not the words of Rama, but of a Rakshasa. Please remain at peace.' But at these words of mine, that chaste woman railed at me with unforgettable words of abuse. It is not befitting for me to utter those words before you. Closing my ears I have hastened to meet you."

(14-15). Thereupon Rama said to Lakshmana: "Even if it be so, it was not right for you to have taken a woman's word so seriously and left my handsome wife alone. In our absence she must surely have been either abducted or eaten up by the Rakshasas." With great anxiety Rama spoke these words and hastened towards his Ashrama. Not finding Sita there, he was completely upset by sorrow and burst into the following mournful words: (16-20). "O dear one! Where have you gone? You are not to be seen in the Ashrama as before. Or are you hiding yourself somewhere to tease me by a false alarm?" Bemoaning in this way, he searched here and there all over that forest and enquired of the forest deities and birds and beasts, "Could you say where my Sita is? May the birds, beasts and the trees of the forest guide me to my wife." But Sita was nowhere to be seen, however much he moaned for her. Though Rama was all-knowing, he could find her nowhere. Though he was blissful by nature, he was subject to sorrow on her account. Though he was omnipresent and motionless, he ran about everywhere in search of her. Though he was egoless, devoid of the sense of 'I', and was of the nature of unbroken Bliss, he none the less experienced bitter sorrow and wept over Sita considering her as wife. 21. Though devoid of all attachments, that great prince of Raghu's line appeared like one attached and a victim to the ways of Maya. But the truth-knowers know that the facts are otherwise.

Meeting Jatayu (22-43)

(22-23). Searching in this way all through the forest, Rama and Lakshmana came across a shattered chariot and a broken bow. Seeing these, Rama said to Lakshmana, "Look, look Lakshmana! Here the abductor of Sita must have been confronted by a rival who must have carried her away from him." 24. A little away from there, seeing a huge blood-smeared body of the size of a hillock, Rama said to Lakshmana: 25. "See here lies that fellow who, after deriving ample satisfaction by eating up Sita, is resting in a solitary place. 26. Give my bow and arrows quickly." Hearing these words of Rama, Jatayu said like one frightened. (27-30). "I am at the end of my Karma and am about to die. There is no need of your killing me. Good wishes to you! I am Jatayu. I chased Ravana who was carrying away your wife. I fought with him and destroyed his vehicle and bow. Thereupon he severed my wings and threw me to the ground. Seeing you before me, I shall end my life." At the sight of him with his life ebbing away, Rama, grief-stricken and shedding tears, passed his hands over his body, and said: 31. "Tell me, O Jatayu, who carried away my handsome wife. You have opted to meet with death for my sake. You are therefore my very dear friend." (32-35). In reply Jatayu who was vomitting blood, said as follows in a very low tone: "O Rama, Ravana, a very powerful Rakshasa, has carried away Sita in the southern direction. I am not able to speak more. I am dying in Thy presence. O holy one! It is my good fortune that I could die seeing Thee. Thou art Mahavishnu, the Supreme Being, who hast assumed a human form by Maya, Thy mysterious power. By seeing Thee even at the end of my life, I have become liberated. Deign to touch me again with Thy hands, so that I may attain Thy Status." 36. Saying, "So be it," Rama stroked his body with his hands, and Jatayu breathed his last and fell down.

37. Rama shed tears at his death as of a close relative and bemoaned his loss in many ways. They took and cremated Jatayu's body in a pyre made by Lakshmana with firewood. (38-40). In deep sorrow

Rama along with Lakshmana took his bath for performing obsequies. Rama scattered over the grassy ground round about, pieces of meat of a slaughtered wild animal with the words: "May all the birds of the forest eat this meat! May it fill the king of the birds with satisfaction!" Next in the presence of all onlookers, he addressed Jatayu, saying: "O Jatayu! You shall attain to My Status possessed of a form similar to Mine." (41-43). Immediately the spirit of Jatayu, embodied in a luminous divine form, ascended a heavenly vehicle resplendent like the sun. He got a form with four hands sporting the conch, discus, mace and lotus, and decorated with a diadem, attractive ornaments and robes of shining yellow cloth. Received lovingly by emissaries of Vishnu with similar forms, and praised by bands of Yogis, the trans-

The Hymn of Jatayu (44-56)

Jatayu said: 44. "Possessed of countless excellences; unlimited by time and space; the most ancient; the cause of the worlds, its sustentation and dissolution; endowed with the radiance of peace; the soul of all souls—such is Ramachandra whom I salute. (45-46). The seat of all bliss; the object of the Goddess Lakshmi's constant gaze; the redresser of the woes of all Devas including Brahma; the noblest among men; the bestower of all boons; sporting in hands an excellent bow and arrows; the acme of beauty of form in the whole universe; the most fitting object to be prayed to and hymned upon; possessing the brilliance of a hundred suns; the bestower of all desired objects; the grantor of refuge; the resident at the foot of the tree of Bhakti; the gladdener of all the members of Raghu's line—such is Rama, in whom I take refuge. 47. Celebrated as the fire that destroys the forest of Samsara; the Supreme Being who is the Master of Siva and all the deities; the embodiment of grace; the destroyer of countless Rakshasa leaders; blue-complexioned like the waters of the Yamuna—such is Rama, verily Hari Himself, in whom I seek refuge. 48. Far away from those whose minds are ever engrossed in worldly thoughts, but ever visible to sages who eschew worldly thoughts; a veritable boat for crossing the waters of Samsara—such is Rama of Raghu's line in whom I take refuge. 49. The Resident of the hearts of 'the Lord of Mountains' (Siva) and his consort; the up-lifter of the mountain; the object of worship of the leaders of Devas and Asuras; the fulfiller of the prayers of Devas—such is Rama, the leader of Raghu's line, in whom I seek refuge.

50. The one, who is fit to be worshipped by those who eschew others' possessions and women; who are ever particular about the welfare of others, and who delight in others' excellences and prosperity—such is the lotus-eyed Rama of Raghu's line in whom I take refuge. 51. Possessed of a face like a fully blossomed lotus rendered charming by a smile; graciously revealing His presence in the consciousness of those who constantly keep up His remembrance; possessed of a blue complexion like the colour of Indra-neela gem; endowed with eyes that are attractive like the petals of a white lotus; the preceptor of even Siva and Brahma—such is the lord of the Raghu's in whom I take shelter. 52. I take shelter in Him, Rama incarnated in Raghu's line, who is more handsome than a hundred Cupids, who is not far away for those who meditate on Him on the lines laid down in Satapatha Brahmana, who is ever shining in the heart of all-renouncing ascetics; and who is the remover of the miseries of all."

54. Immensely pleased with Jatayu, who was reciting this hymn of praise, Rama blessed him telling, "I, Mahavishnu, am granting you My Supreme Status. 55. Besides, whoever studies this hymn everyday or hears it or writes it down, he will remember Me at his death and will attain to My form."

56. Jatayu was filled with unspeakable joy on hearing the blessings of Rama. He got transformed into the form of Vishnu and attained to that Status which is the aspiration of even Brahma.

SALVATION OF KABANDHA

Rama's confrontation with Kabandha (1-14)

1. After these incidents, Rama, moved by intense sorrow, again started with Lakshmana on the search for Sita in another forest. 2. As they proceeded, they came across a Rakshasa of wondrous form. He was a monster, whose huge face was in the chest and who was devoid of important organs like eyes. 3. His two arms extended up to a Yojana. The destroyer of every kind of beings, he was known by the name Kabandha. 4. When Rama and Lakshmana saw this creature of enormous size, they were already between his huge arms, which surrounded them on all sides. 5. Laughing at the sight of him, Rama said to Lakshmana, "Look at this Rakshasa. He is without head or legs. His face is situated on his chest. 6. It is sure that he subsists on whatever comes between the clutches of his huge arms. We are already between them. 7. O Lakshmana! There is no way to get out elsewhere. What shall we do now? He will eat us up very soon." 8. Lakshmana replied, "Why, O Lord, are you agitated over this? With an unperturbed mind, we shall cut off his two hands, each one cutting one arm." 9. Agreeing to this proposal, Rama cut off the monster's left arm with a sword and Lakshmana did the same with the right. 10. The Rakshasa, who was astonished at this, asked, "Are you two celestials? Tell me, who you are. For, neither in the world of men nor of celestials is there any one competent to cut off my arms." (11-12). Rama replied laughing: "There was a great king in Ayodhya called Dasaratha. I am his son Rama. This intelligent man accompanying me is my brother Lakshmana. My wife Sita is a world-renowned beauty. 13. When we both had gone out of our residence hunting, some Rakshasa has abducted Sita. We have come to this awe-inspiring forest in search of her. 14. We found ourselves within the clutches of your huge arms. For saving ourselves, we have cut off those arms of yours. Now tell us who you are with this monstrous form."

Kabandha's Antecedents (15-28)

(15-16). Kabandha replied: "I am indeed fortunate if the one who has approached me is really Rama. In my previous embodiment, I was a leader of Gandharvas. Infatuated with the pride of youth and my handsome form, I went about the world in the company of the women dear to me, delighting them in every way. By austerities, O Rama, I had obtained the boon of indestructibility from Brahma. 17. Once, meeting Ashtavakra, the sage with eight bends in his body, I laughed at him in ridicule. The sage, excited with anger, cursed me, telling, 'O evil fellow! You will become a Rakshasa.' 18. When I beseeched him for pardon, the sage Ashtavakra, resplendent with the power of austerities, spoke to me about my release from the effect of the curse. (19-20). He said, 'In the Tretayuga, Lord Narayana will be incarnated as the son of Dasaratha. He will come near you and cut off your arms of a Yojana's length. You will be free from the effect of the curse at that time and get your original form.'

It is as a result of that sage's curse that I got this monstrous body of a Rakshasa. 21. Once, excited with anger, I opposed Indra, the king of celestials. He, O Rama, struck me on my head with his thunderbolt weapon. 22. As a result of this, my head entered into my trunk and my feet were also destroyed. But, O Rama, because of the boon given by Brahma, I did not die in spite of being struck with the thunderbolt weapon. 23. All the Devas, who felt pity for me for not having a face, asked Indra, 'How will he live without a face?' 24. Indra told me, 'Your face will hereafter be within your trunk. You will get arms, each a Yojana long. Now you go away from here.' 25. Being so commanded, I have been staying here, catching and eating whoever travels through this forest. And now,

O holy one, you have severed my arms. (26-27). Next, O Rama, put me into a pit and fill it with fuel and make a blazing fire. Being thus burnt by you, I shall obtain my original form. After that, I shall tell you about the ways and means to get back your wife."

(28-29). Hearing these words, Rama had a pit made by Lakshmana in which the monster was put and burnt with firewood. Thereupon, there arose from the body, a form equal in beauty to Cupid, decorated with every kind of ornaments. He circumambulated Rama, made a full prostration before him, and with his palms joined in salutation and voice choked with devotional fervour, said as follows:

Kabandha's Hymn (30-56)

He said: 30. "O Rama! I now feel desirous of praising Thee who art partless, limitless and beyond the scope of mind and words. 31. Thou art beyond the two aspects of Thy cosmic embodiment—the subtle one known as Hiranyagarbha and the gross one as Virat, both of which together is Thy manifest form. Distinct from this is Thy unmanifest form as Pure Consciousness, the Subject. Everything other than this constitutes the Object, the unconscious non-self. Therefore, O Lord! How can one know Thee with the mind, which itself belongs to the sphere of the Object or the unconscious non-self? (32-33). What is called Jiva (embodied spirit) is a state of identity of the reflection of the Atman with the Buddhi in which the former is reflected. That which is the Witness (Pervader) of the Buddhi and other adjuncts, is Brahman Himself. He is not an object of perception to Buddhi, being the ultimate Subject. He is unmodified Consciousness and the Essence of everything. In Him, owing to ignorance, the universe is superimposed. What is called the Hiranyagarbha is the subtle aspect of this cosmic manifestation, and the Virat the gross aspect. 34. Thy subtle body, O Rama, is fit to be meditated upon by spiritual aspirants. tation will bring them the supreme good, and they will thereby perceive therein the past, present and future of the universe.

35. Thy gross manifestation called the Virat is the Cosmic Whole, having seven coverings consisting of Mahat-tattva, Ahamkara, Akasa, Vayu, Tejas, Jala and Prithvi, each succeeding one being ten times more extensive than the preceding. This Virat-Purusha, Thy Cosmic manifestation, is a fit object for meditation, which is to be done as follows:

(36-39). Thou, the Virat, art the unity of the whole manifested universe, and the various regions in the universe are Thy parts. The underpart of Thy feet forms Patala, and the upper part of it Mahatala; Thy ankles form Rasatala, and knees, Talatala; Thy two thighs constitute Sutala and Vitala, while their lower part forms Atala; Thy hips form Bhuloka, and Thy naval, Bhuvarloka; Thy chest forms the luminous regions (Jyotir-loka) and Thy neck the Maharloka; the lower part of Thy face forms the Janaloka, and the upper part of it the forehead, the Tapoloka. Thy head is Satyaloka, the most superior of all regions. (40-41). Indra and other Guardians of the Regions are Thy arms; the quarters, Thy ears; the Aswini Devas, Thy two nostrils; Agni, Thy face; Time, the movement of Thy brows; and the preceptor of the Devas, Thy intellect. (42-43). Thy 'I'sense is Rudra; Thy speech, Vedic Mantras; Thy fangs, Yama; Thy rows of teeth, the stars; Thy laughter, Maya that deludes the worlds; Thy side-long glance, creation; Thy front, Dharma, and Thy back, Adharma. (44-45). Thy winking constitutes night and day; Thy abdomen, the seven seas; Thy blood vessels, the rivers; Thy hair, the trees; Thy semen, rain; the power of Thy knowledge, the greatness manifested in the universe—such is Thy gross body. 46. Concentration of mind on this gross form of Thine is the easy way for man to attain salvation.

This form includes everything. (47-50). Therefore, O Rama, I am always meditating on this form of Thine, a practice by which intense devotion is generated in the mind with the hairs on the body standing on end. When one succeeds in meditating on this gross form of Thine; immediately one obtains liberation. Let that topic rest. I now think of Thy form present here before me—the form holding bow and arrows in hand, blue in complexion, donning tree-bark clothes and matted locks, endowed with the freshness of youth, engaged in the search for Sita, and accompanied by Lakshmana. Let this form of Thine, O Rama, be the object of my constant meditation. (51-52). The all-knowing Lord Siva, along with Parvati, is always meditating on this form of Thine. At Kasi, He imparts with joy to dying Jivas Thy Name, the tarakabrah- ma (the saving Mantra), for their spiritual redemption. Therefore, O Lord of Janaka's daughter! Thou art indeed the Supreme Spirit. There is no doubt about it. (53-54). Veiled by Thy power of Maya, the ignorant man does not understand Thee in Truth. Salutation to Thee, Rama, the creator of everything. Salutation to Thee, the Prince of Ayodhya, attended upon by Lakshmana. Save me! Save me! May not Thy Maya veil my insight!"

Now Rama said: 55. "O Gandharva of celestial class! O sinless one! I am very much pleased with your devotion and your hymn. You shall attain to my eternal Status, the goal of all Yogis. 56. Whoever recites every day with devotion and concentration this hymn sung by you, they shall overcome Samsara, the product of Ajnana, and attain to the state of perpetual intuition of Me."

THE MEETING WITH SABARI

Sabari and her Antecedents (1-19)

(1-2). The Gandharva, who was about to depart after getting the Lord's grace, now said to Rama, "O scion of Raghu's line! At a little distance on your way there is an Ashrama where an ascetic woman named Sabari, devoted to the practice of Bhakti, lives, constantly meditating on Thy feet. O worshipful one! Go to her and she will give you all information." 3. With these words, he ascended a heavenly vehicle luminous like the sun and attained to the realm of Vishnu. Such is the fruit of taking the name of Rama. 4. Now, moving away from that dense forest infested by fierce animals like lions and tigers, Rama went towards the Ashrama of Sabari.

(5-6). Seeing Rama in the company of Lakshmana arriving at her Ashrama, Sabari immediately got up with great joy and made prostrations at his feet. With eyes filled with tears of joy, she welcomed Rama and offered him a suitable seat. (7-10). She washed the feet of Rama and Lakshmana with great devotion and sprinkled that water on herself. Offering Arghya and other ceremonial honours, she worshipped Rama according to the scriptural injunctions. Then she offered him the choicest nectar-like fruits that she had collected specially for him. She worshipped his feet with sweet-smelling flowers smeared with unguents. To Rama who was thus received with due hospitality and was seated along with his brother, Sabari, moved by a great upsurge of devotion, spoke with palms joined in salutation.

She said: (11-12). "O the greatest among the Raghus! This Ashrama is the place where some great Rishis, who were my teachers, stayed. For several hundred years, I stayed here attending upon them. They have now abandoned their bodies and attained to the world of Brahman. At the time of departing from the body, they asked me to stay on here in peace. They said to me: (13-15). 'The Supreme Spirit, who exists eternally, has embodied Himself as Rama, the son of Dasaratha, in order to destroy the Rakshasas and protect the Rishis. He will be coming to this place. You remain here till then, concentrating your mind on the Supreme Being. Just now, that great one is staying at Chitrakuta. Retain your body till He comes here and after that you can burn it in the fire of Yoga and attain His Status.' 16. O Rama! Engaged solely in meditation on Thee, I have been staying here awaiting Thy arrival. It has now happened exactly as my teachers said. (17-18). O Rama! Even the Rishis, my teachers, had not the good fortune of seeing Thee. O Thou immeasurable Being! I am an ignorant and low-born woman. I have not the qualification to be the servant of Thy servants at the hundredth remove. What then to speak of my qualification to serve Thee! 19. How is it that I am able to see Thee with my eyes—Thee who art beyond the ken of mind and speech! O Rama! Thou the Lord of all gods! I am not capable of praising Thee with a hymn. What am I to do? Bestow Thy grace on me!"

Rama on the disciplines of Devotion (20-33)

Rama said to her in reply: 20. "The state of being a man or a woman, or belonging to a particular class or Ashrama or a state of life, or bearing any special name is not the qualification for my adoration.

Devotion is the only qualification. (21-22). If a man has no devotion to me, neither sacrifice nor charities, neither Tapas nor the study of Vedas and performance of rituals can help one to see Me. By Bhakti alone am I attained. Therefore, O good lady! I shall now speak to you about the means for the attainment of Bhakti. (23-27). The first and foremost of these is association with holy men; the second is the recital of accounts about me; the third, the singing of My glories; the fourth, the hearing and exposition of My teachings; and the fifth, sincere and devoted service of the teacher, seeing Me in him; the practice of meritorious habits, the control of the inner senses, the observance of external rules of purity and devoted ceremonial worship of Me constitute the sixth discipline; the seventh is a devoted repetition and contemplation of My Mantra with all its parts. The worshipful service of My devotees, seeing My presence in all beings, and the cultivation of non-attachment for all external objects combined with practice of self-control and other inner virtues constitute the eight discipline. Investigation of My true nature is the ninth. Whoever has such devotion with these nine limbs, is eligible to worship Me. 28. O noble lady! Whoever is endowed with these disciplines, whether it be woman, man or brute creation, that person will have Bhakti characterised by intense love. 29. When such Bhakti is generated, the truth about My nature will dawn upon him. Realising Me in that way one will attain Mukti in this very birth. (30-31). Therefore, it is firmly established that Bhakti is the cause of Mukti. If a person has succeeded in the first of these disciplines, namely, the association with holy men, then the others will follow one by one gradually. Therefore, it has been declared that Bhakti is Mukti. You being thus endowed with Bhakti towards Me, I have come before you. (32-33). It is certain that you will attain Mukti, because you have Bhakti. I have Myself come before you. Now, have you any idea where my handsome wife Sita is? Who has taken her away? If you know anything about it, please tell me."

Sabari on Sita's Whereabouts (34-44)

Sabari said: (34-35). "O Omniscient one! Creator of all the worlds! Thou knowest everything. Yet, Thou, the master of all the worlds, only to follow the ways of the world, art putting me this question. Nevertheless, I shall now tell where Sita is. Sita has been abducted by Ravana and is now in Lanka. (36-40). Not far away from here is a vast lake called Pampa. Close to it is a great mountain called Rishyamooka. There, the monkey-leader Sugreeva is staying with his four ministers in terrible dread of his brother Vali. Vali cannot go to the top of that mountain, being afraid of a curse on him by a sage. Deign to go there, O Lord, and enter into an alliance with Sugreeva. He will be able to achieve everything for you. Now, in Thy presence, I wish to enter into the fire, burn my body in it, and attain Thy Status—the Status of Mahavishnu. So please, wait for a while here." 41. Making this request to Rama, Sabari entered into a well-lit fire. With all shackles of ignorance burnt in a moment, she, by Rama's grace, attained to Moksha, which is very difficult of attainment. 42. If Rama, the Lord of the universe is pleased, what is there difficult of achievement? Sabari, though low-born, attained Mukti by Rama's grace. 43. It is then needless to say that a man of high birth, if he be devoted to Rama will certainly attain to Mukti. There is no doubt in the statement that devotion to Rama is Mukti itself. 44. Devotion to Sri Rama gives rise to Mukti. O men all the world over! Abandon all the various types of Mantras which are only the product of Ajnana (ignorance), and with great devotion, adore and serve the feet of Rama, which can fulfil all your needs. O wise men! Worship Rama, the blue complexioned one, who ever shines in the heart of Siva.

Chapter 1

ALLIANCE WITH SUGREEVA

Hanuman's meeting with Rama (1-26)

1. Next Rama and Lakshmana slowly proceeded to the banks of the great lake Pampa. They were amazed to see that extensive and impressive lake. (2-4). About a Krosa in extent, Pampa was a deep lake with water free from the pollution of mud and mire, and clear like the minds of holy men. On the surface of its waters were various kinds of water-born flowers in bloom like lotus, Kalhara, water-lily and blue lotus. Numerous types of birds like

Hamsa, Karandava, Chakravaka, water-fowl, Koyeshti and Krauncha were swimming on, or hovering over, the waters of that lake, producing a symphony of humming sounds. Its banks were crowded with trees and creepers bearing flowers and fruits, the fragrance of which spread all around. 5. Rama and Lakshmana now washed themselves and drank of the refreshing waters of the lake to assuage their exhaustion. They then walked along the cool shores of the lake. 6. Donning matted locks and tree-bark cloth, and equipped with bow and arrow in hands, the two heroic brothers, Rama and Lakshmana, proceeded towards the Rishyamooka mountain, viewing the beauty of the mountain and the various types of trees that they saw round about.

7. From the top of that mountain, Sugraveva, the monkey chief, along with his four monkey companions saw from a distance Rama and Lakshmana approaching the mountain, whereupon he ran to the highest peak of the mountain. 8. Full of fear he addressed Hanuman, "O Friend! who could those two persons probably be? Adopting the form of a Brahmacharin, you go and find out all the particulars about them. 9. Are they here sent by Vali to kill me? You talk with them and try to find out what they have in mind. 10. If they are coming with evil intentions, indicate the same by a sign of your hand. Putting on an attitude of humility and prostrating before them, try to find out their motive."

11. Hanuman agreed to do so, and approaching Rama in the form of a Brahmacharin, saluted him in all humility and said: 12. "Who are you great men, young in age and impressive in every way, as heroic personages are. Your radiance is illumining all the surroundings like the sun and the moon. 13. It dawns on my mind that you are the personages that create, sustain and dissolve the world systems, now manifest in human forms for the benefit of the world. 14. It occurs to me that assuming the form of men you are here moving about, as in sport, to free the world of its burdens and to protect the devotees. 15. Performing the protection, dissolution and creation of these worlds as a play, you, supreme personages, have now adopted the form of Kshatriyas and incarnated yourselves in this world. 16. I believe that you two are Nar-Narayana, the ever-free Lord dwelling in the hearts of all as their impeller, now moving about in this world in human forms."

(17-18). Rama now said to Lakshmana, "Look at this Brahmacharin! He seems to be a master of grammar. His entire speech is flawless." Speaking thus to Lakshmana, Rama, who was knowledge-embodied, now said to Hanuman: (19-21). "I am Rama, the son of Dasaratha, and this is my brother Lakshmana. Honouring the words of my father, I have come to stay in the Dandaka forest, accompanied by my wife Sita. While staying here, O Brahmacharin, my wife Sita has been carried away by some Rakshasa. I am here in search of her. Now tell me who you are and whose son?" The Brahmacharin replied, "Sugreeva, the highly intelligent king of the monkeys, along with his four ministers is staying at the top of this mountain. 22. Sugreeva, is the younger brother of Vali. This evil-minded Vali has expelled him from the country and appropriated his wife for himself. (23-24). Afraid of this Vali, he has taken refuge on this mountain Rishyamooka. I am a minister of Sugreeva. I am born of the Wind-deity as my father, and my mother's name is Anjana. O great scion of Raghu's line! It is proper that you and Sugreeva become allies. 25. He will be helpful to you in destroying him who has abducted your wife. If this arrangement will suit you, we shall go to Sugreeva immediately." 26. Sri Rama said in reply, "O great monkey! I too have come here to enter into an alliance with Sugreeva. I shall also surely accomplish his purpose and become his ally."

Rama's Alliance with Sugreeva (27-59)

(27-28). Hanuman now stood before them in his real form and said to Rama, "Both of you can get upon my shoulders and go to the top of the mountain where Sugreeva is staying with his ministers." Agreeing to do so, Rama and Lakshmana mounted the shoulders of Hanuman. (29-31). In a moment, Hanuman jumped to the top of the mountain and placed Rama and Lakshmana under the shadow of a tree to rest. He then went to Sugreeva and said to him making salutation in all humility, "O King! Cast away all fear. Rama and Lakshmana have come here. Get up soon to receive them. I have requested Rama to enter into an alliance with you. Immediately that alliance has to be solemnised before fire as witness."

32. Then Sugreeva came to the presence of Rama in great joy. Cutting the branch of a tree, he himself made a seat for Rama to sit upon. 33. Hanuman made a seat for Lakshmana, and Lakshmana one for Sugreeva. All of them then sat in great joy. 34. Lakshmana then narrated all matters connected with Rama from the time of his coming to the forest to the time of Sita's abduction. (35-36). Hearing the words of Lakshmana, Sugreeva said to Rama, "O noble Lord! I shall take up the responsibility of instituting a search for Sita. I shall render you all the help I can to destroy your enemy. Now, O Rama! Hear from me a report on certain matters that have come to my notice. (37-40). One day, I was sitting with my ministers at the top of this mountain. I saw from there a noble lady being carried away through the sky by someone. She was crying, 'O Rama, O Rama'. Seeing us on the top of the mountain, she bundled up her ornaments in her upper cloth and threw the bundle down to us. She was crying as she was being carried away by the Rakshasa. I picked up the bundle of ornaments and deposited them in a cave.

Rama untied the bundle, and on seeing its contents burst out again and again, 'Alas Sita! Alas Sita!' Then placing those ornaments on his chest, he began to cry like an ignorant person. 42. Lakshmana now comforted Rama saying, "With the help of this great monkey-leader, we shall kill Ravana in battle and recover Sita without much delay." 43. Sugreeva now said, "O Rama! I shall kill Ravana in battle and present Sita to you. I make this solemn promise to you." (44-45). Then Hanuman lit a fire, and the sinless pair, Rama and Sugreeva, with the fire as the witness, embraced each other with their extended arms in token of their alliance. Next Sugreeva sat by the side of Rama.

46. In a mood of great confidence, Sugreeva now narrated his story to Rama. He said, "O friend! Hear from me, what Vali has done to me sometime back. (47-48). The city of Kishkindha was once attacked by an Asura named Mayavi, the son of Maya. Making great lion-roars, he challenged Vali. Provoked terribly by it, Vali came out and with eyes reddened with anger, hit the Asura with his fist. (49-50). Terribly bruised by the blow, that Asura ran away and took shelter in a cave. Vali and myself went after him. Seeing that he had entered the cave, Vali said to me in great anger, 'You stand outside. I shall enter into the cave.' With these words, he went in, and for a whole month he did not come out. (51-53). At the end of a month, I found much blood flowing out of the cave. I broke down in sorrow on seeing it, thinking that Vali was dead. I closed the mouth of the cave with a stone and returned home and announced that Vali had been killed by the Rakshasa. Our ministers were all very much distressed to hear this; and much against my will, they installed me as king. (54-56). O destroyer of enemies! For some days I ruled the kingdom. And then, Vali came back to the city. In great anger, he abused me in harsh words and delivered punches on me with his fist. In great fear, I fled away from the city, and going about many places, at last took shelter in this mountain Rishyamooka. Due to the curse of a Rishi, Vali cannot come to this mountain. (57-59). That vulgar fellow appropriated my wife. I am very much aggrieved by that. With my wife taken away from me, I am staying here in great sorrow. Today, I have got great relief by touching your feet." And now Rama, much moved by the distressed condition of his friend, said to him, "I shall soon put an end to the life of your enemy who has taken away your wife." Rama took this vow before Sugreeva and others.

Sugreeva calls for tests of Rama's strength (60-75)

60. Thereupon Sugreeva said to him, "O great king! Vali is the strongest among the strong. He cannot be confronted even by the Devas. How are you going to destroy him? (61-62). I shall tell you about his strength, please listen. Once a very powerful Asura named Dundubhi in the form of a huge buffalo attacked Kishkindha and challenged Vali for a duel at night. (63-65). Provoked and overwhelmed with anger, Vali caught hold of the buffalo by its horns, and whirling it round and round threw him on the ground. Then placing one foot on the Asura's body, Vali twisted its head with his hands and severed it from the body. In order to test the weight of that head, he threw it to a distance, and it fell on the ground about a Yojana away near the Ashrama of the sage Matanga. (66-68). From that severed head, a rain of blood poured near that sage's Ashrama. Being enraged at this, the sage Matanga cursed Vali, declaring that if he ever approached the mountain Rishyamuka where the sage's Ashram was situated, his (Vali's) head would be shattered to pieces. From that time Vali never goes to that mountain. Knowing this secret, I have taken refuge in this mountain Rishyamuka and am staying here without fear of Vali. Please see there, O Rama, the head of Dundubhi lying like a mountain. 69. If you can hurl it, it would be proof that you are strong enough to kill Vali. With these words Sugreeva showed that head, hill-like in size. 70. Rama looked at it with a smile, and lo! he kicked it to a distance of ten Yojanas with his toe.

71. "Well done! Well done!" declared Sugreeva and his ministers. Then Sugreeva further said to Rama, the lover of all devotees: 72 "Here are seven huge palmyra trees. See them, O lord of the Raghus! Vali used to shake each of them at a time, until all its leaves fell down. 73. If you can pass an arrow through all these trees, then I can believe that Vali's death at your hand is like an accomplished fact." (74-75). Rama agreed to stand this test also. Possessed of unlimited power, he strung his bow, and shot an arrow which not only passed through all the seven trees, but penetrated even through the mountain and the earth, and returned to Rama's quiver. Overjoyed and amazed at this feat, Sugreeva said as follows to Rama.

Sugreeva's praise of Rama (76-93)

76. Sugreeva said: "O great Lord! Thou art the Paramatman, the protector of all the worlds. Some meritorious actions of mine in the past, have drawn Thee to me and given me Thy association. 77. Holy men adore Thee for the cessation of their entanglement in Samsara. So having gained association with Thee, the bestower of Moksha, how can I pray to Thee for worldly goods, which means a further lease of entanglement in Samsara. 78. Children, wealth, wife, kingdom etc., are infatuations caused by Maya, Thy mysterious power. I do not therefore seek them. Except Thy grace I do not seek anything. So, O Lord of all lords, bestow Thy grace on me. 79. By a rare piece of good fortune I, who have been seeking my worldly welfare, have come to Thee, the bestower of supreme spiritual bliss, just like a man who digging the earth comes across a treasure trove. (80-81). My bondage resulting from primeval ignorance has been cut asunder today. This Samsara is not exhausted through sacrifice, charity, austerity, welfare work and the like; on the contrary, it only gets strengthened. But on seeing Thy lotus-feet it undoubtedly gets effaced. 82. He whose mind remains in Thee unwavering even for a moment—his ignorance, the cause of all entanglement in Samsara, gets destroyed immediately. (83-84). Therefore, O Rama, may my mind remain on Thee at all times. May it not stray into anything else. Whoever takes even for a short time, Thy sweet name, chanting, 'Rama, Rama', such a person is freed from the effects of serious sins like murder and drunkenness. 85. I seek, O Rama, neither victory over the enemy nor the happiness of the company of my wife. I desire only for devotion to Thee, which frees one from all bondages. 86. O leader of Raghu's clan! I am a particle of Thy own Self subjected to the bondage created by Thy Maya. Bestowing on me devotion to Thy feet, save me from this anguish of Samsara. (87-88). Formerly when my mind was clouded by Thy Maya, I entertained the distinctions between enemy, friend and neutral in my attitude towards others. But now on account of my having Thy holy communion, all these differences are gone, sublated by the perception of everything as Brahman. Where is friend, and where enemy to one having this experience? The differentiations made by the Gunas of Prakriti are experienced only when the bondage of Thy Maya operates. 89. So long as ignorance facilitates the operation of the Gunas, this multiplicity is experienced as a hard reality, and so long as multiplicity is experienced due to ignorance, Time generates the fear of death. 90. Therefore he who is satisfied with the life of ignorance, is submerged in the darkness of Tamas consisting in attachment for wife, children, wealth etc., which are all rooted in Maya. Therefore, O the noblest of Raghus, destroy this Maya, which is Thy bond slave. 91. Let all the movements of my mind be offerings at Thy feet. Let my speech be devoted to the recital of Thy name and Thy excellences. Let my hands be engaged in Thy service and let my body have opportunities of contact with Thine. 92. May my eyes ever see Thy images, Thy devotees and my spiritual teacher (Guru). May these ears of mine always hear accounts of Thy doings in Thy incarnation. And may my feet be constantly engaged in making pilgrimages to Thy shrines. 93. O Vishnu, the eagle-vehicled one! May my limbs bear the dust of the holy spots sanctified by Thy feet. And may my head, O Rama, be ever prostrating at Thy feet, which are adored even by Siva and Brahma."

THE DESTRUCTION OF VALI

Fight between Vali and Sugreeva (1-18)

1. To Sugreeva, whose sins were all eradicated by being embraced by him, Rama said smiling. 2. Applying his delusion-generating power of Maya on Sugreeva in the interest of the success of his mission, Rama said, "O friend! Whatever you have said is true 3. But the world will say, 'With the fire as witness, Rama took the vow of helping Sugreeva. What has he done to fulfil his obligations to Sugreeva?' People will bring such criticism against me. 4. To prevent the circulation of such aspersions against me, you challenge Vali for a fight. It will end in good for you. (5-7). With a single arrow, I will kill Vali and install you as king." Agreeing to this proposal, Sugreeva went to the grove adjacent to Kishkindha and with a terrific roar, challenged Vali for a fight. Hearing that sound produced by his brother, Vali, his eyes red with anger, emerged soon from his abode, and went to the place where Sugreeva had stationed himself. He rushed at Sugreeva, who thereupon hit him on his chest. (8-9). Vali too, provoked to extreme wrath, delivered punch after punch on Sugreeva with his fist, and Sugreeva did the same to him in return. Thus, these two, resembling each other very much, fought between themselves. Rama was watching them in great astonishment, but did not release the arrow for fear of striking Sugreeva, for Vali and Sugreeva resembled each other so much. 10. Shaken with fear, Sugreeva ran away defeated, vomitting blood; and victorious Vali returned to his abode. Now Sugreeva said to Rama. 11. "O Rama! Do you want me to be killed by the enemy, my brother? If your object is to kill me, you can yourself do it directly, O Lord! (12-14). O adherent of Truth and lover of those who seek refuge in you! Why have you abandoned me after generating confidence in you in my mind?" Hearing Sugreeva's words, Rama with tears in his eyes embraced him and said, "Be not afraid, O friend! Both of you being alike, I could not release my arrow fearing that it might strike you, my friend. Therefore, to avoid this mistake by confusion, I am giving you a distinguishing mark. 15. Now go again and challenge Vali, and you will see him dead. I, Rama, am swearing this to you. O brother! In a moment, I will destroy your enemy."

(16-18). Consoling Sugreeva in this manner, Rama said to Lakshmana, "O high-souled one! Make a garland of fully blossomed flowers and put it on the neck of Sugreeva. Send him against Vali, thus marked with a garland." Lakshmana did accordingly, and prompted Sugreeva to set forth again for battle. Sugreeva went out once more and with a terrific sound challenged Vali.

Tara's plea to Vali (19-41)

19. Surprised at this new challenge, Vali in great wrath, girded up his loins and got ready to take up the challenge. 20. While thus getting ready to start, he was obstructed by Tara, who said, "I do not think it is correct for you to go now. I have got great apprehensions in my mind. 21. It is only just now that Sugreeva ran away defeated by you. He is again returning for combat in great haste. He must have some very powerful ally behind him for support." 22. To her Vali said, "O handsome lady! You give up these apprehensions regarding him. Release your hold on my hand. Let me go to meet the enemy. (23-24). I shall be for her everywhere, he along with Laksh-returning very soon after killing him. Who can be his ally? If there is any such ally for Sugreeva, I shall kill him too in an instant and return. Grieve not. When challenged by an enemy, which courageous person can stand without responding? So, O handsome lady! I shall return soon after destroying him."

25. Tara said in reply. "O great ruler! Hear from me some news that I have learnt. After that you can do as you think fit. When son Angada had gone on a hunt, he heard some news which he reported to me. (26-33). It is as follows: They say there is a great personage by name Rama, the son of King Dasaratha of Ayodhya. Along with his brother Lakshmana and wife Sita, he has come to stay in the Dandaka forest. It appears that Rama's wife Sita has been abducted by Ravana. Searching mana arrived at Rishyamuka and entered into an alliance with Sugreeva, taking an oath of rendering mutual help, with fire instant and return. Grieve not. When as witness. The agreement between them, it seems, is that killing you in battle, he will resolve, they are staying in their abodes nearby. Now hear my advice. It's only just now that Sugreeva ran away defeated. Then, how can he come for battle so soon? (This gives credence to my fear that he has a powerful ally behind.) Therefore, it is better that you abandon your enmity with Sugreeva and bring him to your city and install him as the heir apparent. You, therefore, seek shelter in Rama. O great monkey leader! Thus be pleased to save your country, community, Angada and myself from destruction." With these words, Tara, shedding tears, prostrated before Vali and caught hold of his feet with her hands and wept bitterly out of fear. Then Vali, embracing her, said to her with great affection. (34-36). He said, "Dear wife! Your words are the mere promptings of your womanly timidity. I have no such fear. If Lord Rama along with Lakshmana has come here, I shall certainly get into friendship with him. I have heard formerly that the Supreme Lord Narayana has incarnated Himself as Rama for relieving the earth of her burdens. He is the Supreme Self and He is not likely to have any distinction between friend and foe. 37. O virtuous woman! Saluting His feet, I shall fetch Him home. He, the God of gods, seeks those who seek Him. He is approachable through devotion. (38-41). If Sugreeva comes alone to fight, I shall kill him in no time. You spoke to me about cultivating friendship with Sugreeva and making him the heir-apparent. How can I, O dear lady—I, the celebrated Vali whose heroism is recognised by the whole world—follow the suggestions prompted by fear, when challenged by the enemy to fight? How can I think or speak like that? Therefore, O handsome lady! abandon your sorrow and remain at home." Consoling the grief-stricken and weeping Tara in this way, Vali went out determined to kill Sugreeva.

Death of Vali (42-71)

(42-43). Powerful Sugreeva, now with a garland of flowers around his neck, seeing Vali advancing, rushed at him with great speed like an elephant in rut, and delivered punches on him with his fist. Vali did the same to Sugreeva. Thus their fight went on. (44-47). Sugreeva fought all along, casting glances at Rama. Looking at these two, engaged in mortal combat, Rama took up an arrow from his quiver and attached it to his divine bow. Hiding himself behind the stump of a tree and pulling the bow string up to his ear, Rama of great prowess released at the chest of Vali that arrow, which was powerful like the thunder-bolt weapon. The missile smashed the chest of Vali, who jumped up causing earth-tremors and then with a terrific howl fell to the ground.

(48-50). Vali lay unconscious for a time. Then regaining consciousness, he saw before him, the lotus-eyed Rama, holding bow in his left hand and an arrow in the other, donning tree-bark cloth and a crown of matted hair, broad-chested, resplendent with a wreath of wild flowers, and stout, long arms, shining with the lustre of new Durva grass, and accompanied by Sugreeva and Lakshmana on either side.
51. Seeing Rama before him, Vali spoke to him the following words of insult. He said: "O Rama! What harm have I done to you to justify your slaughtering me? 52. In shooting an arrow at me hiding behind the stump of a tree, you have violated the code of conduct of royal personages. You have committed an extremely heinous crime. (53-54). O Rama! What gain are you going to reap by fighting with me adopting the conduct of a thief? If you are a Kshatriya born in the line of Manu, fight with me facing me and reap its consequences. What favour has Sugreeva done to you and what is it that I have left undone? 55. I have heard, O Rama, that while staying in the forest, your wife has been abducted by Ravana and that you have taken refuge with Sugreeva in order to recover her. (56-57). O Rama! Have you not heard of my strength, which is so well-known all over the world? I am capable of capturing Ravana along with all his tribe and bringing the whole of Lanka along with Sita in no time, if I wish to do so. I have heard people saying that you are a strict adherent of righteousness. 58. Tell me what rules of righteousness you have observed in killing a monkey, hiding like a hunter. The flesh of monkeys is not fit for consumption. What have you gained by killing me?"

(59-61). To Vali, who was thus speaking at length with insulting words, Rama, born in Raghu's line, replied: "I am moving on this earth, with bow in hand in order to enforce the rules of Dharma in this world. Destroying the perpetrators of Adharma, I am here to establish Dharma. A daughter, a sister, a sister-in-law, the daughter-in-law—all these are alike. If a foolish man takes a woman of any of these relations as a wife or mistress, he is to be considered a sinner, and he deserves to be executed by the king. 62. You have forcibly appropriated for yourself the wife of your younger brother. So, O monkey leader, I, who know Dharma, have killed you. 63. Great men move about in this world to sanctify it. Because of your monkey nature, you are not able to understand it. So do not indulge in insulting criticism."

64. Hearing these words, the terror-stricken Vali, recognised Rama as Mahavishnu Himself. So making prostrations to him with an agitated mind, he said to Rama:

65. "O high-souled Rama! Thou art verily the Supreme Being. The ignorant monkey that I am, I have made these irreverent remarks. Be gracious to pardon me for the same. 66. I am going to die, struck with Thy arrow and particularly in Thy very presence. It is not given even to great Yogis to see Thee in this way. 67. He, by repeating whose name in a mood of helplessness at the time of one's death, a Jiva attains to the Supreme Status—even He is now standing before me. 68. O Divine Being! I recognise Thee as the Supreme Purusha, Maha-Vishnu, and Sita as Thy consort Sri.

And may Thou be gracious to my son Angada, who is equal in strength to me. 70: O Rama! Stroking my chest, be Thou gracious enough to pull out the arrow." Rama, thereupon removed the arrow, holding him by the hand. That monkey-chief now left his physical body and his spirit became identified with Indra. 71. Struck by the arrow of Rama, and stroked by his cooling and comforting hands, Vali immediately left his monkey body and attained to a Status, which is difficult even for Paramahamsas to gain.

AFTERMATH OF VALI'S DEATH

Tara distracted at Vali's death (1-11)

- When Rama, the Supreme Self, killed Vali in battle, all the monkeys, terrified beyond measure, rushed to Kishkindha.
- The monkeys went and reported to Tara,

"O Noble lady! Vali has been killed in battle. Take measures to protect Prince Angada. Instruct the ministers in this respect. 3. Closing all the gates of the city, we shall guard it. Proclaim Angada as the king of the monkeys." 4. Hearing that Vali was dead, Tara was overcome by sorrow and she beat her chest with her hands several times. 5. She cried, "What am I to achieve by Angada, by the kingdom, by the city, by wealth? I shall die together with my husband even now." 6. Speaking in this way and weeping in bitter sorrow, she walked quickly with her locks dishevelled to the place where her husband's dead body was lying. 7. On seeing Vali's body lying on the ground, covered with blood and dust, she cried aloud, "O my husband! O my husband!" and fell at his feet. 8. With tears flowing from her eyes, she looked at Rama and said to him, "O Rama! Kill me also with the same arrow with which you killed Vali. 9. I want to attain to the same realm as my husband and be with him. O scion of Raghu's line! Without me, he will not be happy even in heaven. 10. O holy one! You have experienced the sorrow arising from separation from one's wife. So, send me soon to Vali. You will thereby gain the merit equal to arranging for a person's marriage. 11. And, O Sugriva, the kingdom being assigned to you by Vali's killer, you have easily gained kingship over it. You now enjoy it in the company of your wife Ruma without fear of any enemy."

Rama's sermon to Tara (12-39)

12. Tara, who was bemoaning her fate in this way, was graciously comforted by the high-souled Rama by imparting to her the knowledge of Truth. 13. Rama said to her, "O timid lady! It befits you not to mourn over your husband's death. Who is your husband—is it this body or the Jiva? Think of the true state of affairs. 14. The body is a combination of the five elements and inert. It consists of skin, flesh, blood, bones etc., and is born of the functioning of Time, Karma and Gunas. It is lying here now before you. 15. If you consider that your husband is the Atman, then as the Spirit, he is deathless. He, as the Spirit, is neither born nor dead, nor sitting anywhere. 16. The Jiva is all-pervading and endless. He is neither a man, nor a woman, nor a neuter. He is one without a second, unaffected by anything, just like the sky. He is eternal, pure, and of the nature of Consciousness. What reason is there for you to mourn for him?"

17. Tara now questioned Rama, "O Rama! The body is an insentient thing like a piece of wood. The Jiva is deathless and of the nature of Pure Consciousness. If it be so, whose is this bondage? Who is it that experiences pleasure and pain and is affected by them?"

18. Sri Rama replied, "So long as one feels the 'I-sense' with regard to the body, subtle or gross, and the Indriyas, so long that ignorant person (Atma) is subject to Samsara, birth and death. 19. The false and superimposed bondage of Samsara, of one contemplating on the objects of the senses, does not pass off by itself, just as the false experience of a dream does not. It is eradicated only when the sleep ends. 20. By its connection with the beginningless Avidya, the I-sense, which is itself a product of Avidya, experiences Samsara, characterised by attraction, aversion etc., though it is entirely meaningless. 21. O Noble lady! Samsara and the bondage experienced in that state belong to the Manas. The Spirit getting identified with the Manas becomes a participant of the bondage accruing to the latter. 22. This phenomenon can be understood from the analogy of how a clear piece of crystal placed near a red paint appears as stained by that colour. Though the crystal looks red in appearance, it is not really stained. (23-25). Similarly owing to the proximity of Buddhi, Indriyas and the like, the experience of Samsara is forced upon the Atman. The Atman identifying itself with the Manas—whose reflected sentiency helps one infer its matrix, the Atman, as Pure Sentiency—, enjoys the sense objects which are born of Manas itself in association with the Atman. Thus the Atman comes to be involved in Samsara, helplessly bound by the Gunas or the objects of the senses. First, the mind in association with Atman, generates the sense objects and superimposes on them their painful and pleasurable nature. From this arise their repulsiveness and attractiveness, which make the Jiva perform works, some pure (Sukla), some impure (Krishna), and some others a mixture of these two (Lohita). Subject to these various types of Karmas, the Jiva is involved in Samsara for the whole cosmic cycle. 26. When everything is dissolved into the primitive condition at the end of the cosmic cycle, the Jiva along with all its acquired tendencies and its Karma potential gets dissolved in beginningless Avidya, owing to its identification with mind, senses etc., and remains in that condition. 27. When the time of creation comes at the end of the cosmic cycle, the Jiva gains manifestation once again, wrapped in mind and tendencies acquired in the past. Helplessly, he is thus submerged and projected into Samsara, just like a water-lifting machine. (28-29). When, as a result of some meritorious deeds, the embodied Jiva gets association with My devotees or holy men, established in peace, then he gradually turns his attention towards Me. He then gains that rare good fortune of hearing recitals of My actions and excellences. When he seriously takes to these devotional disciplines, he will without much difficulty gradually gain an understanding of the real nature of the Self. (30-31). Instructed by a competent spiritual teacher, the sense of the Vedic dictums dawns on him. He comes to have the intuitive experience that his Self is identical with the supreme and blissful Self, non-dual, eternal and distinct from body, senses, mind, Prana and the I-sense (Ahamkara). Gaining this knowledge, he becomes liberated immediately. Know that what I have said is the Truth. 32. Whoever always contemplates seriously on these teachings that I have given out, him the trials of Samsara will never affect. 33. You too, think over these teachings of Mine with a pure and concentrated mind. Then you will not be afflicted by miseries. You will be free from the bondage of Karma. 34. O handsome lady! In your previous birth, you had practised devotional discipline. Therefore, for your liberation from Samsara, this form of Mine has been revealed to you. 35. If you constantly contemplate on this form of Mine and think over these teachings, then Karmas will not bind you, even if you be engaged in activities brought about by life in Samsara."

(36-38). Tara heard all these instructions of Rama with great interest and attention. She overcame her grief born of identification with the body, and made prostrations before Rama. Rejoicing in being established in the Self, she became a Jivanmukta—one liberated in this very life. By her contact with Rama, the Supreme Self, for a short time, Tara became freed from all stains and from the beginningless bondage of Avidya. 39. Hearing all these instructions of Rama, Sugreeva also overcame the influence of ignorance totally and became established in peace.

Coronation of Sugreeva (40-54).

40. Rama now said to Sugreeva, the great monkey, "You make arrangements now for the cremation and obsequies of your elder brother at my command. Make his son perform all the rites of funeral obsequies as laid down in the Sastra." (41-43). Agreeing to do so, Sugreeva had the body of Vali lifted by many powerful monkeys and kept on a specially decorated vehicle. To the accompaniment of the sound of kettle-drums and big drums and of all other forms of royal insignia, and followed by Brahmanas, ministers, monkey governors, citizens. Tara and Angada, the body of Vali was taken to the place of cremation and all rites were performed according to scriptural injunctions. Then Sugreeva took his bath and along with the ministers went to Rama's presence,

(44-45). Prostrating at Rama's feet, Sugreeva said with a sense of deep satisfaction: "O great royal personage! Rule over this prosperous realms of the monkeys. I shall be your attendant just like Lakshmana and serve you for a long time." To Sugreeva who spoke these words, Rama said with a smile: 46. "You are verily myself. There is no doubt about this. At my order, you install yourself as the ruler of the city and the kingdom. 47. O dear friend! For fourteen years, I will not enter into any city. So my brother Lakshmana will go with you to the city. (48-49). Install Angada as the heir-apparent. I along with brother Lakshmana, shall spend the rainy season on the peak of this neighbouring mountain. You go and live in your city for some time.

After that, you can begin the search for Sita." 50. Sugreeva prostrated before Rama and said, "O great one! Whatever you order me, I shall do accordingly." 51. Permitted by Rama, Sugreeva went to the city in the company of Lakshmana and did everything as instructed by Rama. 52. Received and honoured properly by Sugreeva, Lakshmana soon finished his work and reported himself to Rama by prostrating at his feet.

53. Next Rama and Lakshmana proceeded to a high peak of the mountain called Pravarshana. 54. There Rama came across a cave which had the brilliance of crystal, which gave shelter from sun, rain and wind and where fruits and roots were in easy reach. He resolved to stay

RAMA IN RETREAT AT PRAVARSHANA

Rama instructing Lakshmana on his ritualistic worship (1-42).

1. Rama and Lakshmana spent happily the rainy season, moving about for recreation among the caves made of precious stones on the mountain side and subsisting with great satisfaction on the fruits and roots available there in abundance. 2. There Rama saw with wonder masses of rain-clouds in the sky moving before the wind with peals of thunder and flashes of lightning coming from within their watery mass.

They resembled a herd of elephants in rut with golden seats spread on their top. 3. On the grassy mountain surface could be seen moving about birds and beasts, happy and plump by consuming an abundance of fresh green grass. Seeing Rama's presence there, they stood looking at him with wide-open eyes. (4-5). Like ascetics ever immersed in meditation, there stood those birds and beasts gazing at Rama—birds and beasts who were verily Siddhas come to serve the Supreme Being, as he moved about in the form of a man amidst those forests and mountains.

(6-7). On one of those days, when Rama after his meditation was sitting in solitude in a contemplative mood, Lakshmana approached him in all affection and humility, and said: "O Lord! By the instructions Thou gave me on past occasions, the doubts of my mind born of beginningless Avidya, have been cleared. (8-10). I now wish to hear from Thee how Karma Yogis offer Thee their ritualistic worship. This path is always claimed by the Yogins as a way for the attainment of Mukti. Besides, Narada, Vyasa and the lotus-born Brahma speak of it as a way that confers Mukti alike to Brahmanas, Kshatriyas and Vaisyas as also to women and Sudras. O great one! Please speak to me, Thy brother and devotee, about this way of quick and universal access to Mukti, so that the whole world besides myself may be benefited thereby."

Sri Rama said in reply: 11. "The ways of My ritualistic worship are endless. I shall therefore give you a brief exposition of it in its essential parts according to their importance. (12-14). After being invested with the sacred thread according to the traditions of the family, a person must get initiated into My Mantra and worship from a proper Guru. He should then proceed to perform My worship as shown by the teacher, with deep devotion and attention. Worship can be offered to Me as residing in the heart, or fire, or an image, or the sun, or the Salagrama. First an aspirant should cleanse his body by taking a morning bath 15. He should utter appropriate Mantras, Vedic and Tantric, while bathing, and apply mud or other ingredients allowed by the scriptures for purifying his body. Then he should perform Sandhya and other daily rites. 16. With a pure mind he should at the beginning of worship utter the Sankalpa (the right resolution) for the successful performance of the rite. The worshipper should then adore the Guru in mind with the conviction that the Guru is Myself. (17-18). If the worship is done on a stone medium, ceremonial bath of the Deity with water should be performed. If the object of worship is an image, rubbing is necessary. Then offerings should be made with well-known ingredients like flower, sandal paste etc. If the worship is to bear fruit, it should be done with purity and sincerity of mind, and with observance of austere disciplines, and adherence to the procedure of worship according to the tradition as imparted by the Guru. Decoration of the image with flower garlands etc., is highly pleasing to Me. (19-20). If the worship is done through the medium of fire, then oblations with ghee accompanied with other ingredients should be made. If the sun is the medium of worship, then a ritualistic design to represent the sun must be made on the floor and worship should be offered on it. As for ingredients, offering of even mere water with firm faith by a devotee, is pleasing to Me. Not to speak then of how pleased I am when worshipped with flowers, sandal paste, incense, and offerings of fruits, sweets, Payasa and other delicious preparations. 21. The worshipper should sit on a seat made with Kusa grass at the bottom and deer skin and cloth over it. He should sit facing the Deity, with his mind pure and filled with holy thoughts. 22. Then one should do Nyasa or placement of fingers with Mantras. The first Nyasa to be performed is Matrika-Nyasa, which consists in placing the fifty one alphabets on the body and on the worshipping image. Then should be done Kesavadi Nyasa by placement of twentyfour divine names, and this is to be followed by the Tattva-Nyasa. (The details about thee Nyasas are given in the Narada Pancharatra). 23. Next should be done Murtipangara-Nyasa (which consists in the placement of the divine names given in Vishnu-Panjara-stotra from the head to the feet). After that Mantra-Nyasa should be done. All these have to be done also to the image scrupulously. (24-25). Then a little to the left in front of oneself, the water pot must be kept and on the right side the flowers to be offered. In the same way, four vessels must be arranged for Arghya, Padya, Achamana and Madhuparka. One should then meditate on the Jiva (embodied spirit), who is a particle of Myself, in the heart-lotus luminous like the sun. 26. Then one should think that He is permeating the whole of the body from head to foot. Next one should transfer every day that Divine-Consciousness within oneself into the image to be worshipped and feel it as a living presence. 27. Then one should adore Me with great sincerity, according to one's means, with Padya, Arghya, Achamaniya, water for bath, cloth and decorations. 28. Those who have plenty of means should everyday make offerings of Karpura, Kumkuma, Akil, sandal paste and fragrant flowers. (29-30). An aspirant can do with the help of experts

the Dasavarana Puja as given in Agastya Samhita. Everyday worship should be done with incense, light, various kinds of food offerings, bath etc. with great faith (Sraddha). I, the Lord of all, is a consumer of whatever is offered with great faith and sincerity. Those who are experts in Mantras, should every day make offerings in fire (Homa) also according to scriptural dictates. 31. In a sacrificial pit designed according to the rules laid down in Agastya-Samhita, one versed in Agamas should make oblations of ghee and other ingredients with the chanting of Mula-Mantra or the Purusha-Sukta. (32-33). Or without making any special sacrificial pit, one can make oblations with Charu in the sacred fire kept by oneself. During the time of offering, one should contemplate on Me, golden in colour and decorated with divine ornaments, and as dwelling in the middle of the flame. In conclusion, offerings should be made to My attendants. (34-35). Next, one should make silent repetition of My Mantra with the mind dwelling on Me. After that, he should offer Me betel leaves with a joyful mind, and next engage himself in dance, song, praise, chanting and reading of the scriptures. Next, he should make a full prostration contemplating on Me in his mind. (36-37). He should next imagine in his mind, the Deity as giving the offered flowers etc., to him as Prasada as a mark of His grace, and he should place them on his head. Then he should mentally grasp the feet of the Deity and touch his head on them and pray, "O Lord! Lift me from this terrible life in Samsara of repeated births and deaths." With this prayer one should make prostration. Then, just as he brought out the Deity from his consciousness, for the purpose of worship, he should also take Him back into himself, according to the rite called Udvasa. 38. If a man worships Me, in the way I have expounded, he will attain to spiritual well-being by My grace in this world and the next. 39. If a devotee worships Me everyday in this way, he attains Sarupa or salvation by getting My own form. There is no doubt about it. 40. Whoever either reads or hears this supremely holy and esoteric exposition of My worship as given by Myself, will attain to the fruits of doing all forms of daily worship." 41. Thus, the Supreme Being incarnated as Sri Rama, on being questioned, expounded this doctrine of ritualistic worship to His brother Lakshmana, who was himself an incarnation of Adisesha. 42. But afterwards assuming the attitude of an ordinary man, through the power of his own Maya, Rama, stricken with sorrow, spent sleepless nights calling aloud, 'O Sita'.

Hanuman's advice to Sugreeva (43-54)

43. In the meantime, in Kishkindha, intelligent Hanuman had a private conversation with Sugreeva, the king of the monkeys. 44. Hanuman said, "O King! I shall speak to you of certain matters in your real interest. Rama has already done for you a favour of a very valuable type. 45. But I find that like an ungrateful person, you seem to have forgotten all that. For your sake, he has destroyed Vali, celebrated for his strength and heroism in all the three worlds.

(46-47). You have been installed as king. You have also got back your very handsome wife Tara. The high-souled Rama, however, is living on the top of the mountain with his brother, and perhaps he may be eagerly awaiting your arrival before him with the news about Sita. But you are not aware of these facts, being absorbed in women's company, following the ways of monkeys. 48. After promising to find out the whereabouts of Sita, if you fail to do so, you will, like an ungrateful person, meet with the same fate as Vali."

(49-50). Hearing Hanuman's words, Sugreeva was filled with fear and he said to Hanuman, "What you have said is correct.

Now in all haste, please send ten thousand powerful monkeys in all the ten directions for the search for Sita. Please enforce this order of mine quickly. (51-52). Let all the monkeys dwelling in the seven continents be called. All of them should come within a fortnight. Those who fail to do so will be condemned to death." Giving these orders to Hanuman, Sugreeva went to his abode. 53. The intelligent and competent minister that he was, Hanuman immediately put Sugreeva's order into practice and sent monkey messengers in all the directions 54. With great care and attention, Hanuman deputed, after honouring them with good words and presents, a number of monkey messengers who were possessed of great excellences like courage and quickness of movement like the wind, and who were huge in size like mountains.

LAKSHMANA'S ULTIMATUM TO SUGREEVA

Rama's grief, thinking of Sita (1-25)

1. Meantime, dwelling on that resplendent mountain, Rama, distressed extremely by separation from Sita, said as follows:
 2. He said, "O Lakshmana! See, my Sita has been forcibly abducted by the Rakshasa. I have not yet been able to determine whether she is dead or alive. (3-6). If anybody gives news about her survival, he will be doing me a service, which I shall appreciate very much. If I come to know about the whereabouts of that chaste wife of mine, I shall by force get her back, as Amrita was got from the ocean. Now, this, O my brother, is my vow. Whoever has taken Sita, I shall burn him with all his sons and his armies into ashes. Alas! O Sita of moon-like face, I can imagine how miserable you must be to sustain life without seeing me, in that Rakshasa's abode. Separated from that moon-faced wife of mine, even this moonlight appears to me to be as hot as the rays of the sun. 7. O moon! Touch my body after you have cooled your rays by contacting Sita, the daughter of Janaka. It looks that this Sugreeva is heartless. He does not understand how distressed I am. 8. Having obtained a kingdom free of all enemies, he is now living in privacy with ladies, giving himself to drink and over-indulgences. He has proved himself to be absolutely ungrateful. 9. Even after the spring season has come, there is no sign of his starting in search of my wife. Wicked and thankless as he is, he has forgotten me, his great benefactor. 10. I shall destroy Sugreeva along with his city and all his tribe. I shall send him the same way as I have sent Vali."

(11-13). Seeing Rama in this angry mood, Lakshmana now said, "Command me whatever you want to be done. Even now I shall go and kill that Sugreeva and come back." Saying so, Lakshmana, equipped with bow, quiver and sword, was ready to start. Rama thereupon said to him: "Dear brother! Sugreeva is my close friend and it is not proper for you to kill him.

(14-15). Only frighten him that he too will be killed like Vali. Communicating this, return soon with his reply. I shall decide what should be done after that." Agreeing to do so, Lakshmana of great prowess went without delay, towards Kishkindha determined, as it were, to burn the whole tribe of monkeys with the fire of his anger.

(16-22). But, how is it that Rama, who is all-knowing, who has Lakshmi ever abiding with Him, who is of the nature of Pure Consciousness, is seen as distracted like an ordinary worldly man because of separation from Sita? How can He, who is the witness of Buddhi, who transcends Maya and its effects, who is in truth without attachment and aversion, be afflicted by the effect of Maya, namely, the sorrows of the world? The answer to this mystery is this. In order to fulfil the request made to Him by Brahma, and also to give the proper reward to King Dasaratha for his austerities, He incarnated assuming the form of a man. Besides, He, who is Mahavishnu Himself, wanted to provide men engrossed in Samsara with the story of Ramayana as a means for the eradication of all their sins. So He assumed this form of a man as Rama, in order to teach man how to behave in worldly life and how to attain the highest spiritual destiny; and for this, He, the One transcending all the Gunas of Prakriti, behaved according to time and circumstance like one infatuated by anger, delusion, lust etc.—in fact, as a helpless man subject to the love of a woman. 23. He is, in truth, of the form of Pure Consciousness and is endowed with the power of Pure Consciousness. He is the pure witness transcending the Gunas of Prakriti. Therefore, as the sky is unaffected by anything, He is not affected by lust, anger and other passions. 24. The ordinary people in ignorance may credit Rama with attachment, aversion and weaknesses, but Sanaka and other great Rishis know the truth about Him and attained to Him through that. So too, is this truth known to others, who are pure at heart and are endowed with devotion to the Lord. 25. The Lord, who is unborn and ever existent, presents Himself to devotees, according to the degree of their mental purity and spiritual capacity.

Lakshmana in a threatening mood (26-63)

(26-28). Now Lakshmana approached the city of Kishkindha and twanged his bowstring, spreading terror into the minds of all monkeys. Thereupon, several of the ordinary monkeys, in order to put up a defence got upon the rampart, with rocks and trees in hand, producing a tumultuous sound. Seeing the monkeys in such a menacing mood Lakshmana bent his bow in order to bring about their total destruction. 29. Hearing about Lakshmana's arrival, Angada, the chief of the ministers, came quickly to meet him. He dispersed all the monkeys, and going near Lakshmana, made prostrations to him. (30-31). Lakshmana, possessed of winning manners, then embraced Angada and said to him, "Dear one! Rama is in an extremely angry mood. I have come here at his command. Convey this news to your uncle." Agreeing to do so, Angada went back quickly and informed Sugreeva of Lakshmana's arrival. (32-34). Hearing that Lakshmana had arrived at the gate of the city in a very angry mood, Sugreeva was terribly frightened and called his trusted minister, Hanuman. He said to Hanuman, "Go quickly with Angada and try to pacify the angry Lakshmana, and persuade him to come into the palace." Commissioning Hanuman in this way, the king of the monkeys said to Tara: 35. "You please go, and with sweet words try to pacify Lakshmana and bring him to the inner apartments. After he is thus pacified, I shall meet him."

(36-38). Agreeing to do so, Tara went towards the middle region of the palace. Angada with Hanuman now went and saluted Lakshmana at the gate. They said to him, "O great one! O worshipful one! O hero! Considering this as your own home, please come in and after meeting Sugreeva and his consort, order us what we have to do. We shall do accordingly."

39. Saying so with great devotion, Hanuman, the son of the wind-god, held Lakshmana by hand and led him from the middle of the street into the palace. 40. On all sides, Lakshmana saw the huge mansions of the chiefs of the community and reached the palace of the king, which was comparable to the abode of Indra. (41-46). When he reached the middle region of the palace, he was greeted by Tara, the moon-faced beauty, bedecked with jewellery and with eyes crimson-tinged through intoxication. After saluting Lakshmana

she said to him smiling, "O Kinsman! I pray for your welfare. You are one of noble conduct and extremely loving towards your devotees. Why are you angry at the king of the monkeys, who is a devoted servant? He has for a long time been suffering from sorrows and hardships continuously. Now he has been rescued from that difficult situation by you. By your grace, he has been restored to prosperity. But do not think that the noble-minded Sugreeva, being addicted to sexual enjoyments, has failed to come and meet Rama. O Lord! Monkeys will come from all directions. O scion of Raghu's line! Ten thousand monkeys have already gone to different places to mobilise a big army of mountain-sized monkeys. 47. Sugreeva himself will go with the army of monkeys and destroy all the Rakshasas including Ravana. (48-50). The monkey chief Sugreeva will go with you immediately to Rama. Now please come into the palace and see Sugreeva in the midst of his family. After he is relieved of his fear, you can take him with you." Lakshmana, with his anger assuaged a little by Tara's words, now went into the inner apartment of the palace where Sugreeva was seated on a cot with his wife Ruma. (51-52). Seeing Lakshmana, Sugreeva got up like one extremely frightened, with his eyes rolling in intoxication. Angry Lakshmana now said to him, "O you wretch! You seem to have forgotten Rama, the greatest of Raghu's line. Remember, that the arrow which killed the heroic Vali is still with him. (53-56). Killed by me, you too will go the way of Vali." To Lakshmana who was speaking in this very harsh tone, the heroic Hanuman said, "Why do you speak in this vein? This monkey-chief is more devoted to Rama than even yourself. He is ever awake to Rama's interests. He has not forgotten anything. Crores of monkeys have already arrived. Look all around. Soon they will start in search of Sita, and Sugreeva will fully achieve the purposes of Rama."

57. Lakshmana felt ashamed of his conduct on hearing the words of Hanuman. And just then Sugreeva also came forward and received Lakshmana in the proper way with Arghya and Padya. (58-62). Embracing Lakshmana, Sugreeva said, "I am the servant of Rama. I have been saved by him. Rama can conquer the whole world in a trice by his own power. My monkey armies are only a small help in this enterprise." Lakshmana then said to Sugreeva, "I have perhaps talked too much. O worshipful one! I said all that out of love only. Please pardon me for the same, O Sugreeva! We shall even now go to see Rama.

He is staying alone on the mountain, steeped in sorrow on account of separation from Sita, the daughter of Janaka." Agreeing to do so, Sugreeva got into a chariot along with Lakshmana. Accompanied by monkeys he proceeded to the place where Rama was staying. 63. To the accompaniment of drums, Mridanga and other musical instruments, and provided with royal insignias like white ceremonial umbrella and peacock-feather fans, and accompanied by a band of ministers headed by Hanuman, Neela, Angada, and a big following of bears and monkeys—Sugreeva now went to Rama's presence.

SEARCH OF THE MONKEYS

Monkeys Commissioned on the search
(1-29)

(1-3). Sugreeva and Lakshmana saw Rama at a distance sitting at the mouth of a cave—Rama, who was dressed in a deer skin and torn clothes, who had matted locks adorning his crown, who was broad-eyed and smiling, who was distracted by separation from Sita, and who was there peacefully sitting and watching the birds and animals nearby. Seeing Rama of blue complexion, they both got down from the chariot, and approaching him, fell down at his feet in prostration. 4. Rama, a master of all codes of right conduct, embraced Sugreeva, made enquiries about his welfare, and seating him by his side, extended to him a reception according to tradition. 5. Now Sugreeva, in an attitude expressive of his deep devotion, said as follows: "O Lord! See the great army of monkeys that is gathering. (6-7). Here is assembled an army of countless numbers of monkeys come from their abodes in various continents, lakes and mountains. Born in principal mountain ranges, they have all originated from parts of the Devas. In size they are like the Meru and Mandara mountains, and they can take any form they like. They are also well-versed in all forms of warfare. 8. Besides, they are all incredibly strong—some equal in strength to one elephant and others equal to ten or even ten thousand elephants. There are still others whose strength cannot be estimated. (9-10). These monkey heroes are of varied complexions—some shining like anitmony, some golden-coloured, some with red faces, some long-tailed, some crystal-clear, and some demon-like. All these monkeys of various sizes and appearance are roaming about roaring, thus expressing their war-lust. 11. O Lord! All these monkey-heroes, subsisting on roots and fruits, are now assembled here to carry out your orders. Besides them, there is the army of bears, whose leader is the wise and heroic Jambavan. (12-19). Here is another, my famous chief minister Hanuman, who is the leader of a crore of bears and noted for his great strength and courage. He is the off-spring of the Wind-deity, possessed of unlimited prowess, the best among intellectuals and an adept in diplomacy. Next, O Rama, hear the names of my other generals in the order of their importance. They are: Nala, Neela, Gavaya, Gavaksha, Gandhamadana, Sarabha, Maindava, Gaja, Panasa, Balimukha, Dadhimukha, Sushena, Tara and Kesari, the high souled and mighty father of Hanuman. All of them are endowed with great character and in their warlike quality equal to Indra himself. Everyone of them is a leader of a crore of monkeys. All of them, born of Devas, are assembled here to carry out your orders. Here is Vali's son Angada equal to Vali himself in strength, and capable of destroying armies of Rakshasas. All these and several others, capable of catapulting pieces of mountain and adepts in destroying enemy forces, are assembled here ready to give up their lives for your sake. O the noblest of Raghu's line! All these are at your disposal, ready to carry out your orders."

(20-24). Thereupon Rama, embracing Sugreeva with tears of joy in his eyes, said, "O Sugreeva, you know the serious nature of the mission we are to undertake. If it pleases you, you have to institute a search for the whereabouts of Sita, the daughter of Janaka." With great pleasure Sugreeva thereupon directed all his powerful monkey followers to take up this search for Sita. While sending various types of monkeys in different directions, he selected after much deliberation, a special band of his followers to go in the southern direction. In this group he specially included his heir-apparent Angada, Jambavan, Hanuman of mighty prowess, Nala, Sushena, Sarabha, Mainda and Dvivida. He gave the following order to the search party. (25-27). "You have to spare no effort in searching for the virtuous and handsome Sita. You have to finish your search within the period of a month. Any one returning even a day after the lapse of that period without finding out Sita, will have to face severe punishment at my hand, including execution." After giving these directions and sending off those powerful monkeys, Sugreeva prostrated before Rama, and sat by his side.

(28-29). Seeing Hanuman about to start, Rama called him aside and said to him: "As a token for recognition, you privately give to Sita this signet ring of mine, having my name inscribed on it. I deem you, O monkey leader, as the principal agent in this enterprise. I have understood the full extent of your prowess. Now go ahead. May success attend your effort!"

Meeting with Svayamprabha (30-58)

30. Angada and other monkeys who were thus commissioned by their king to search for Sita, wandered here and there for long on their quest.
31. In the forest of the name Vindhya they came across a fierce and gigantic Rakshasa subsisting on the deer and elephants he came across.
32. Some of these great monkeys took this monster to be Ravana, and with enthusiastic cries hit him with their fists. 33. On realising that he was not Ravana, they proceeded to another forest where they were faced with the problem of drinking water. 34. Wandering through the dense forests with their throat and tongue parched, they came across a big cave hidden by the growth of grass and creepers. (35-36). They found coming out of it, birds like Crōuncha and Hamsa with water dripping from their wings. Concluding therefore that there must be water within, they decided to go into it. Hanuman entered the cave first, and led by him, several of them, who were greatly excited by the prospect of finding water, followed him linking hands. (37-40). After they had penetrated a long distance through darkness, those monkeys came across a very strange place. They found there water reservoirs with crystal-clear water. There were trees resembling Kalpaka-Vriksha, the heavenly wish-yielding tree, bending with fruits having about sixteen measures of juice in each. They saw there well-designed houses, full of precious gems, wearing-clothes and excellent food materials. But the place was without any living inhabitants. When they surveyed the place in extreme wonder, they saw in one of the houses, the luminous form of a lady dressed in tree-bark clothes and sitting alone completely absorbed in meditation. (41-42). The monkeys, full of fear and devotion in their mind, made prostrations to that ascetic woman. She, on her part, asked the monkeys, "Whence and for what purpose have you come here? Whose messengers are you? Why have you invaded my residence?" To these queries, Hanuman replied, "O venerable lady! I shall tell you everything about ourselves. (43-47). There was a great king, prosperous and powerful, named Dasaratha ruling over Ayodhya. His eldest son of great nobility and fame is named Rama. Obeying the command of his father, he along with his wife Sita and brother Lakshmana, came to stay in the forest. There, his devoted wife was abducted by evil-minded Ravana. Subsequently, Rama along with his brother happened to meet Sugreeva and entered into an alliance with him. As an ally, Sugreeva instituted a search for Rama's wife and has sent us all on the task of searching for Sita. Searching for Sita all through this forest, we found ourselves very thirsty and entered into a terribly dark cave, driven by thirst. Fortunately, we have now come across you. We would like to know who you are and why you are staying here. Please tell us about this, O noble lady!"'

(48-50). The ascetic woman, who was highly pleased to see the monkeys, asked them to come and hear about her story after they had partaken of the delicious fruits there and drunk of the nectar-like water to their fill. The monkeys did so accordingly, and with their hunger and thirst appeased, gathered round her and stood with palms joined in salutation. That divine-looking ascetic woman then said, addressing Hanuman: 51. "Once upon a time, there was a daughter of Viswakarma named Hema who looked like a divinity in appearance. Through the art of dance, she propitiated Parameswara. 52. Pleased with her, Lord Parameswara gave her this wonderful place as her abode. She lived in this place for a long number of years. 53. I am her friend. I am devoted to Mahavishnu and am an aspirant for Moksha. My name is Svayamprabha and I am the daughter of a Gandharva named 'Divya. 54. Before my friend Hema attained to Brahma-loka, she said to me, 'You stay in this solitary place devoid of other living beings and perform austerity. 55. In the Treta Yuga, the eternal and undecaying being Narayana will be born as the son of Dasaratha, and for lightening the burdens of the earth, he will move about in this forest. (56-57). In search of his wife Sita, a troop of monkeys will come to the cave where you are residing. Extend a proper reception to them and then do heartfelt salutation to Rama. After that, you will attain to the Status of Vishnu, which is the goal of Yogis alone.' So now, I am in a hurry to meet Rama. 58. All of you close your eyes. You will then be out of this cave in a trice." The monkeys did accordingly and they found themselves in the forest where they were before.

(59-60). Next that ascetic woman Swayamprabha immediately left her cave and went to the place where Rama was. Seeing Rama in the company of Lakshmana and Sugreeva, that high-minded lady made repeated circumambulations round him, and after prostrating herself before him with horripilations all over her body, she said with a voice choked with emotion: (61-66). "O great Lord! I am Thy servant come here to see Thee. For getting a sight of Thee, I have been staying in a cave for countless years, performing great austerities. Those austerities of mine have come to fruition today. Though Thou art residing within the hearts of all as well as without, Thou art invisible, being beyond the bounds of Maya. That Supreme Being, I am now fortunate to salute. Like an actor, Thou art hidden behind a curtain of Maya. Embodied as a human being, Thou art unrecognisable to those whose insight is vitiated by ignorance. Thou hast incarnated Thyself in order to provide a means of communion through devotion for great aspirants after Bhakti. O Supreme Lord! Immersed as I am in Tamas, how can I recognise Thee? O Lord of Raghu's line! Let philosophers seek to know Thy true nature, but as for me, I am satisfied with this form of Thine. May this form shine ever in my heart. I have now seen Thy feet which show the path of Moksha. (67-68). Beyond the vision of those who are immersed in Samsara, Thou, the revealer of the Truth to all seekers after Moksha and the wealth of those who have no possessions, canst never be even an object of speech for those who are established in the pride of wealth, relatives and power. (69-70). Salutation to Thee, who art beyond the Gunas of Prakriti. Salutation to Thee, who art the wealth of those who have no other wealth than Thee. Salutation to Thee, who art ever immersed in the Bliss of Thyself. Salutation to Thee, who transcendest the Gunas but yet manifestest as Gunas. I look upon Thee as Time, as the lord of all, as the one without beginning and end, as the one abiding unmodified in everything, and as the one Supreme Being that transcends everything. None, O Lord, can understand the mystery of Thy human advent. 71. None is dear to Thee, none inimical, none indifferent. These differences are only attributed to Thee by those whose vision is clouded by Thy Maya. 72. Birthless, actionless and endowed with supremacy over all, the talk of birth and actions by Thee in Thy incarnations among Devas, men and sub-human beings relate merely to appearances assumed by Thyself. (73-78). Though Thou art really birthless and deathless, some say that Thou art born, so that devotees may hear accounts about Thee and Thy deeds as a means for salvation. Some say that Thy birth is in fulfilment of the austerities of King Dasaratha of Kosala, and some that it is the result of the prayers of Kausalya. Still others say that in answer to the prayer of Brahma, Thou art born as man in order to relieve the earth of the burden of evil Rakshasas. O Lord of the Raghus! Whoever hears or sings about Thy actions and excellences, attain Thy feet, which help them cross the ocean of Samsara. How can I know or praise Thee, who art distinct from the i-sense resulting from the limitation of the Gunas of Thy Maya—Thee who art not an Object perceptible, but yet art existent everywhere. I salute the Lord of the Raghus, equipped with bow and arrow and accompanied by brother Lakshmana and Sugreeva.” To that devoted ascetic woman who sang his praise in this way, Rama, the eradicator of the sins of those who prostrate to Him, said, “Ask what you want of me.”

79. She replied with great devotion, “In whatever womb I may be born, O Lord of devotees, grant me unswerving devotion to Thee. 80. May I ever have association with Thy devotees and never with worldly-minded people! May my tongue ever utter with devotion, ‘Rama, Rama’, Thy sacred name. (81-82). May my mind ever contemplate on Thy form of blue complexion—bedecked with armlets, anklets, pearl necklaces, ear pendants and Kaustubha gem, donning a brilliant crown and yellow wearing cloth, equipped with a bow and arrows, and accompanied by Sita and Lakshmana.”

83. Rama said, “O high-souled lady! I grant you your prayer. You resort to the Badari forest and there, contemplating on Me, you will abandon this physical body made of five elements and attain to Me, the Supreme Being, without much delay.”

84. Hearing these nectarine words of Rama, the ascetic woman Swayamprabha went to the Badari forest, and there meditating on Rama, abandoned her physical body and attained to the supreme State.

Chapter 7

MEETING WITH SAMPATI

Anxiety of the Monkeys (1-11)

1. Now the monkeys, resting on the trees of the forest for a while on account of weakness arising from the search for Sita, immersed themselves in very anxious thoughts.
2. Angada said to a group of monkeys: "Wandering in the cave, we have already exhausted the period of one month given to us for the search.
3. We have not been able to find out Sita yet and accomplish the king's order. If we now return to Kishkindha, Sugreeva will execute us.
4. Particularly he will kill me, I being the son of his enemy. He has no affection for me. I have been saved only by Rama.
5. Now that I have not been able to fulfil Rama's purpose, the evil-minded Sugreeva will surely kill me, making my failure a pretext.

6. That evil-minded Sugreeva is now consorting with his elder brother's wife, whom he should look upon as his mother. Therefore, O great monkeys., I shall never go to him. (7-8). I shall therefore give up my life here in some way or other."
- Some of the monkey chiefs who saw him sitting with tears in his eyes, now spoke to him, shedding tears in sympathy with him.
9. They said, "Why are you sorry like this? We shall protect you and save your life. We shall stay on with you in this cave free from all fear.
- (10-11). This cave has an abundance of all desirable things and is verily like the city of the Devas."

monkeys, Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, who was versed in the art of administering consolation to people, embraced Angada and spoke to him.

Hanumam assuages their fears (12-22)

He said: (12-15). "Why are you thinking like this? This kind of pessimistic thought does not befit you. You are very dear to our king, being the son of Tara. You are also a person of great capacity. Rama loves you even more than Lakshmana. Therefore you have nothing to fear from Rama and especially from our king also. I am your well-wisher. Do not be under any misapprehension. What the other monkeys have advised you about absolute safety of life within this cave, is not to be believed in; for, there is nothing in the three worlds into which Rama's arrows cannot penetrate. Those monkeys who are giving you this wrong advice will not stay with you. For they have their wives and children. Abandoning them, how will they stay with you? (16-22). I shall reveal to you a highly esoteric truth. O child! Rama is not a mere man. He is the Divinity, the eternal Being Narayana Himself. Sita is His Maya Sakti, who infatuates the whole world. Lakshmana is Adisesha, who supports the whole universe. In response to the prayer of Brahma all these protectors of the world are born assuming human forms in order to destroy the tribe of Rakshasas. All of us monkeys too are denizens of Vaikuntha, the Lord's Abode. When that Supreme Being assumed a human form, we too, by the power of His Maya, have been born in the form of monkeys. In our previous births, we had propitiated the Lord by our austerities and received His blessing. As a consequence, we have attained the status of his attendants. Now also, we shall, as occasioned by the power of Maya, be doing His service, and after that attain to Vaikuntha and abide there happily."

Meeting with Sampati (23-56).

23. Afterwards, moving forward little by little in search of Sita, the monkeys reached the valley of the great mountain Mahendra, near the shore of the southern sea. (24-25). Seeing that ocean, extending with no shore in sight and deep and awe-inspiring, they were all frightened. They stopped near the sea shore thinking over what they should do thereafter. Angada and other powerful monkeys all jointly conferred on their next move. 26. They thought, "Wandering in that cave, we spent a month without locating either Ravana or Sita (27-28). Sugreeva is in the habit of giving very severe punishments. He will certainly kill us all. Fasting unto death is better than death by Sugreeva's hands." Deciding this way, they spread beds of Darbha grass and laid themselves on it, determined to die by fasting.

29. Just then, there emerged from a cave of the Mahendra mountain, an eagle mountain-like in size, who went slowly to the place where the monkeys were lying. (30-31). Seeing the monkeys preparing to die of fasting, the eagle said, "I have now got plenty to eat. I shall eat these one after another every day." The monkeys were frightened to hear these words of the eagle. 32. They now began to speak among themselves, "This vulture will eat up all of us. There is no doubt about it. O great monkeys! We have not done even a little service to Rama. 33. Nor have we done any service to Sugreeva, or to ourselves. So by dying at the hands of this vulture without any merit to our credit, we shall be consigned to the realm of Yama. 34. Look at Jatayu —how he sacrificed himself for a righteous cause. Opposing the enemies of Rama he laid down his life for the cause of Rama. Thereby he attained Moksha, which even Rishis cannot have."

(35-36). That vulture Sampati, hearing these words of the monkeys, said, "You are speaking among yourselves about my brother Jatayu, a name very dear to me. You please tell me who you are. O monkey-heroes! You shall have nothing to fear from me." (37-40). Thereupon, the noble Angada got up and went to the vulture and said to him as follows: "Rama, the son of Dasaratha, along with his brother Lakshmana and wife Sita was staying in this dense forest. The wicked Ravana abducted Sita when Rama and Lakshmana had gone out for hunting. As Sita was crying aloud, 'Rama, Rama' while being carried away, the powerful eagle named Jatayu heard these cries and joined battle with Ravana.

Thus fighting for the cause of Rama, he met with a hero's death. 41. Rama cremated him. For these reasons, he has attained unity with Rama. Next Rama happened to meet Sugreeva and enter into an alliance with him before fire as witness. 42. At the request of Sugreeva, Rama killed Vali whom none can ordinarily overcome. Thus the mighty Rama wrested the kingdom from Vali and awarded it to Sugreeva. 43. After that, powerful Sugreeva deputed us, monkeys of great strength, to find out the whereabouts of Sita. (44-45). 'You must return within a month; failing that I shall execute you'—such was the order of Sugreeva. Now wandering in a cave in these mountains, we spent more than a month. We have not been able to locate Ravana or Sita. We have reached the shore of this salty ocean and are lying here resolved to die by fasting. (46-48). O great bird!

If you know anything about that glorious lady Sita, please tell us." Hearing the words of Angada, Sampati said with great joy, "O great monkeys! Jatayu is my dear brother. Now after the passing of many years, I am getting some news about him from you. I shall be able to give you some helpful suggestions in regard to your quest. But before that, please lead me to the shore of the ocean, so that I may do the obsequies of my brother. (49-50). After that I shall speak to you on matters that will be helpful to you in your mission." Agreeing to this proposal, the monkeys led him to the shore of the ocean. He took his bath in the ocean and made libations of water to his dead brother. After that the monkey leaders led him back to his seat. Sampati now spoke to them words that brought cheer to the heart of the monkeys.

(51-55). He said, "On a peak of the Trikuta mountain, is situated the city of Lanka. There guarded by a body of Rakshasa women, Sita is confined in an Ashoka grove. This city of Lanka is situated a hundred Yojanas across the sea. Being endowed with distant vision natural to vultures, I can see from here the city of Lanka and Sita confined there. Whoever can cross this span of a hundred Yojanas of ocean and find Sita there, can also return with the news of her discovery. I myself would have striven to destroy that Ravana, the murderer of my brother. But now I am wingless. So you now try your best to cross the ocean. After that Rama, the leader of Raghu's clan, can destroy Ravana. 56. Now you confer and decide who among you can reach Lanka, crossing this hundred Yojanas of distance across the ocean, meet and talk with Sita, and recross the ocean with the news of her discovery."

SERMON OF CHANDRAMAS TO SAMPATI

Sampati's previous history (1-12)

1. All the monkeys, being very much intrigued to see Sampati and hear his words, wanted to know more about him. So they said to him, "O great one! Tell us all about your story from the beginning." (2-3). Sampati thereupon narrated the past incidents of his life. He said, "Myself and my brother Jatayu, being very proud of our strength in our youth, wanted to test it once by flying up to the region of the sun. (4-5). We flew several thousand Yojanas up, when Jatayu felt unable to bear the heat of the sun. In order to protect him, I sheltered him under my wings on account of my love for him. When I was thus protecting him, my wings were burnt by the heat of the sun, and from that great height, I fell on the top of the Vindhya mountain, losing consciousness. 6. Three days after, I recovered consciousness, but wingless and confused in mind. I could not recognise the countryside or the mountain peaks. 7. When I slowly opened my eyes, I saw there a very attractive Ashrama. I slowly moved up to that Ashrama. (8-9). The sage Chandramas, who was living in that Ashrama, saw me with great astonishment and said, 'O Sampati! How do you happen to be like this, deformed? Who did this? I knew you before as one endowed with very great strength. How is it that both your wings have been burnt? Please tell me all about it, if you have no objection.'

(10-12). I thereupon narrated to him the whole of my story, and with great sorrow in my heart, asked that great sage: 'O holy one! All my body is burning as if I have fallen into a forest fire. Without my wings, how am I to sustain my life?' That sage thereupon addressed me, casting a kindly look. He said, 'Dear one! Listen to my words, and after that do as you please. All this sorrow of yours springs from the body, and the body is born of one's own past Karmas.

Chandramas Expounds the Philosophy of the Atman (13-19)

(13-14). 'Because man thinks of his body as himself, Karma becomes operative. This I-sense, which binds one to the body, is beginningless and is a result of ignorance. In itself it is inert without consciousness, but being in association with the reflection of pure consciousness, it appears conscious, just as a red hot piece of iron appears hot and shining in association with fire. Because the body is in identification with this I-sense, the body too appears to be endowed with consciousness. 15. Dominated by the I-sense, the Atman thinks of himself as the body and becomes subject to the cycle of births and deaths, and to the consequent experience of happiness and misery. (16-17). The Atman in itself is changeless but because of this false identification, he thinks: I am the body and I am the doer of various actions. Thus, the embodied being becomes the performer of many actions and is helplessly bound by their consequences. He finds himself fettered and wanders hither and thither in this transmigratory cycle as a victim of sinful and meritorious actions. 18. He makes a resolution: 'I have done many meritorious actions like sacrifices and charities. I shall therefore attain to heaven and enjoy heavenly felicities.' 19. By the same sense of identification, he enjoys these heavenly pleasures for a long period, and then when the effect of these meritorious deeds has dwindled, the same power of Karma sends him down, however much he may dislike it.

Travails of the Jiva (20-41)

(20-22). "The descending Jiva, reaches the sphere of the moon, and from there, united with a drop of water, comes down to earth, and falling on cereals, gets identified with them. After remaining in that condition for long, he becomes any of the four types of food and in that condition is eaten by man. In the human body he is reduced to the seed, which being deposited in the womb of a woman and becoming united with the blood therein, becomes solidified within a day into the state called Kalala ensheathed by the placenta. 23. Within five nights the foetus develops into a foam-like substance, and within seven nights into a muscular tissue. 24. Within fifteen days blood will appear in it, and within twenty five nights a small shoot develops from it. 25. In one month the neck, head, shoulder, backbone and abdomen will be formed one after another. 26. Then in the second month, the arms, legs, hips and knee-caps develop one after another. 27. In the third month, all the joints of organs are formed, and the fingers, in the fourth. 28. In the fifth month the nose, ears, eyes, teeth, nails and the genitals develop. 29. In the sixth month, the orifice of the ears, anus, the sex organ and navel are formed. 30. In the seventh month, hair on the body, and the skull and the distinctiveness of all organs are formed. By the eighth month, the full human form comes into shape. 31. In this way, the foetus gradually develops in the womb. By the fifth month, signs of life are seen throughout the foetus. 32. Through the small orifice in the umbilical cord the foetus draws a little of the essence of the food consumed by the mother. It is by the power of its own Karma that it develops without perishing.

33. 'The foetus now gets the memory of its previous lives and actions. With that memory, and suffering from the heat of the abdomen, the foetus thinks as follows: 34. Born in innumerable wombs, I had associations with many wives and children, relatives and possessions. 35. Preoccupied with the maintenance of the family, I managed to earn money in righteous and unrighteous ways. But unfortunate that I am, I never thought of the Lord even in dream. (36-38). As a consequence of it, I am now undergoing tortures in the womb, considering the impermanent body as permanent. I have done things which I should not do. I never did things beneficial for the Atman. After undergoing the sufferings due to all such actions, when I get out of this hell-like womb, I shall hereafter engage myself always in adoration of Mahavishnu.
 (39-40). While thinking like this, he is ejected by the powerful forces of parturition, subjecting him to very great sufferings. Just as a sinner emerges from hell, he comes out of the foul smelling bodily orifice, resembling a worm in appearance. Thereafter, he undergoes all the sufferings of infancy. 41. O vulture! I am not going to describe them or the sufferings of youth and other periods of life, as they are well-known to you and all other creatures.

42. Thus as a result of identifying oneself with the body, the Jiva undergoes the sufferings of hell and the life in the womb.

43. 'Therefore, abandoning this sense of identification with the subtle and gross bodies, one should recognise oneself as the Self transcending Prakriti. Abandoning the feeling that 'I am the body', he should know himself as Atman. 44. He should know himself as the Self, who is not involved in the states of waking, dream, and sleep, who is distinguished as Truth and Consciousness, who is pure, wakeful and peaceful. (45-47). When the Atman, who is of the nature of Truth and Consciousness, is realised and the infatuation caused by ignorance erased, it is immaterial whether the body dies or continues to live as a consequence of the operative Karma (Prarabdha Karma). A man of realisation will not identify himself with the body, and he has as a consequence neither enjoyments nor sufferings afterwards. Therefore until your operative Karma is exhausted and the body perishes, you live in the body without identification with it, just as a snake carries on its external sheath of skin, until the time for it to separate comes. O Vulture! I shall tell you another thing also which will contribute to your supreme good.

Conclusion of the Sampati Episode (48-55)

48. "The Eternal Being Narayana will incarnate Himself in the Treta Yuga as a son of Dasaratha. He will come to the forest of Dandaka for the destruction of Ravana. (49-51). While he will be staying in a forest Ashrama along with his wife Sita and brother Lakshmana, Ravana will steal away Sita like a thief and take her to Lanka when the two brothers would have gone out into the forest. Directed by Sugreeva a host of monkeys will come up to the seashore in search of Sita. You will have occasion to meet them for your own good. 52. You inform them about the true location of Sita. When you do that, your two wings will again sprout."

53. Sampati continued, "The sage Chandramas communicated all this to me. Now you see how extremely handsome wings are sprouting on my body. 54. May you succeed and prosper. You will certainly be able to find out Sita. Now

EMERGENCE OF HANUMAN THE HERO

The Monkeys Confer Again (1-14)

1. Great was the joy of the monkeys intent on finding out Sita when they saw that lordly vulture flying high up into the sky. 2. Looking at the sea expansive and unapproachable like the sky and augmented by its mighty waves and filled with whales and other dangerous aquatic creatures, the monkeys began to speak among themselves as follows: 3. "How shall we cross this ocean?" Then Angada said, "O noble monkeys! Hear what I say. 4. You are all endowed with very great strength, courage and adventurous spirit. Who among you will be able to cross this ocean and accomplish the king's directive? 5. That one will be really the protector of the lives of all of us. Therefore, I request him who is powerful enough to do this, to come forward before me. 6. That person will undoubtedly be the saviour of the lives of all the monkeys as also of Rama and Sugreeva. There is no doubt about it.” 7. When Angada, the heir-apparent, said like this, all the monkey heroes remained silent, looking at one another.

8. Angada again said, “For the accomplishment of this task, let each one declare out the strength he possesses. After that we shall determine who will be able to accomplish this task.” 9. Hearing Angada’s speech, those monkey heroes one after another began to specify the extent they could leap. From ten Yojanas onwards, each succeeding monkey leader offered to leap ten Yojanas more than the previous speaker. (10-11). From among the monkeys Jambavan now said, “I can leap upto ninety Yojanas. In a previous age, when Mahavishnu incarnated Himself as Vamana and measured the whole world by one step, I circumambulated His foot twenty one times. But now I am old and my capacity to leap is very limited.” 12. Now Angada said, “I shall be able to leap across the ocean to the other shore, but I do not know whether I am capable of leaping back.” 13. The heroic Jambavan said, “But you are our leader and king. Even if you are powerful enough, I do not think it is proper to give this task to you.” 14. To this Angada said, “If matters stand like that, let all of us once again stretch ourselves on Darbha beds to die of starvation. Without accomplishing this task none can hope to live.”

Jambavan’s Prompting of Hanuman (15-29)

(15-17). Now the heroic Jambavan intervened again and said, “O child! I shall now show you him who can accomplish this task very easily and expeditiously.”

After saying so, he addressed Hanuman who was standing aloof. He said, "O Hanuman! In this grave situation, why are you standing aloof and silent? This, O powerful one, is the occasion for you to demonstrate your strength. You are the offspring of the Wind-god and are as powerful as he. (18-20). You are begotten by that deity in order to accomplish Rama's purpose. Long before, at your very birth, seeing the rising sun, you jumped towards him mistaking the disc of the sun for a ripe fruit. After going up about five hundred Yojanas you fell down on the earth. When you could accomplish such a feat, who can really estimate the extent of your strength? Wake up, accomplish the purpose of Rama and save us all."

21. Highly elated at these words of Jambavan, Hanuman gave out a lion-roar loud enough to split the cosmos. (22-23).

He then grew into a huge mountain-like dimension like another Vamana and declared, "Crossing the ocean, I shall reduce Lanka to ashes. Destroying Ravana with all his tribe, I shall bring Sita, the daughter of Janaka. 24. Dragging Ravana, by my left hand, with a halter round his neck and with my right lifting up the whole of Lanka along with the mountain on which it is situated, I shall go to Rama and deposit them before him. 25. Or, after discovering the location of noble Sita, I shall return." Hearing these words of Hanuman, Jambavan said: 26. "Now, finding out the whereabouts of Sita, whether she is alive or not, you should return. Afterwards, accompanied by Rama, you can go to Lanka and demonstrate your strength. 27. O dear one! May good fortune befall you who have decided to go by the sky across the ocean. May the winds blow favouring you!"

28. Backed by the blessings of the great monkey leaders, Hanuman went up to the top of Mahendra mountain, assuming a form that created wonder in the minds of all onlookers. 29. All the onlookers saw that great personage Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, there, mountain-like in size, golden in colour, pink and handsome in face and possessed of arms long and powerful like the king of the serpents.

SUNDARA KANDAM

Chapter 1

HANUMAN'S CROSSING OF THE SEA

Hanuman Takes the Leap (1-7)

(1-4). Desirous of leaping across the hundred Yojanas of ocean infested by aquatic creatures, Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, meditated in mind on Rama the Supreme Self, and said as follows in a mood of high elation: "O ye comrade monkeys! Be ye the witness of how I go through the sky like an unfailing arrow shot by Rama. I shall now itself find the whereabouts of Sita and return to Rama after accomplishing my task. (5-7). He by uttering whose name even once at the time of death a Jiva is able to cross the otherwise unspannable ocean of Samsara and attain to His divine Status—that Rama's signet ring with His name engraved, I carry with me. How insignificant then is this small ocean for me? Meditating on Him in my mind, I shall cross it with utmost ease." With these words Hanuman took a leap through the sky in the southern direction with the speed of wind—his arms spread, tail erect, neck straightened, legs contracted and eyes looking up.

Surasa Episode (8-25)

(8-12). As Hanuman was leaping through the sky the Devas, who were observing with keen interest from the sky, felt that they should test the power of the monkey and said among themselves: "This powerful monkey equal to the wind in prowess is speeding towards Lanka. But we do not know whether he is powerful enough to reach Lanka or not." Thinking on these lines, that host of interested Devas said to Surasa, the mother of serpents, as follows: "You go and create some obstruction to the great monkey. Testing thus his intelligence and power, you can come back soon." Being thus instructed, she proceeded soon on the mission of obstructing Hanuman's passage. (13-16). She went and blocked the passage of Hanuman and said to him, "O wise one! Enter into my mouth quickly. Verily the Devas have offered you to me as food to appease my hungry stomach." Thereupon Hanuman said to her: "O mother! I am going at Rama's command to find out the whereabouts of Sita. Finding her out, I shall return quickly and, after conveying to Rama the news about her welfare, I shall enter into your mouth. Now please give me passage. Salutation to you Surasa."

(17-18) To this Surasa replied: "I am very hungry. You may go after entering into my mouth. Otherwise I shall eat you up." On being thus addressed by her, Hanuman asked her: "Then open your mouth quickly. I shall enter into it and proceed without delay." With these words Hanuman stood before her expanding his size to the extent of a Yojana. 19. Seeing Hanuman's form, Surasa made her mouth five Yojanas in extent, whereupon Hanuman made his form double that size. 20. Surasa now stood with a mouth twenty Yojanas wide, whereupon Hanuman assumed a size of thirty Yojanas. (21-22). Surasa, now increased the extent of her open mouth to fifty Yojanas. Hanuman immediately reduced himself to the size of a thumb, entered her mouth, came out and addressed her, saying, "I have now entered into your mouth and come out of it, as wanted by you. Salutation to you, O Mother!"

(23-25). Seeing Hanuman before her and hearing these words of his, Surasa said to him: "O thou the wisest among intelligent personages! Now proceed and accomplish the mission on which Rama has sent you. I have been sent here by the Devas to test your strength. You will be able to see Sita and report to Rama about it." With these words, she went away to her heavenly abode. Next Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, traversed through the atmosphere like Garuda.

Mainaka Episode (26-33)

(26-28). Now the Sea-god said to Mount Mainaka which had huge deposits of gold and precious gems: "Powerful Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, is going for fulfilling the objectives of Rama. You must go and do some service to him. I have got the name of Sagara, because the sons of King Sagara augmented my extent. The noble Lord Rama, the son of Dasaratha, is one born in the line of that King Sagara. Now this great monkey is on an errand for the achievement of some purpose of Rama. 29. You raise yourself to the water surface soon. Let Hanuman rest on you for a while and then proceed." That mountain of enormous size agreed to this proposal and rose above the water surface.

(30-32). Towering over its many peaks with quarries of precious stones, the mountain appeared in a human form and said to Hanuman who was on his onward journey: "O noble monkey! I am Mount Mainaka. I have been sent here by the ocean for affording you some rest on your way. Descend on me and after assuaging your hunger with the nectarine fruits growing on me and taking rest for a while on my surface, you can proceed further at your ease." To him who spoke this-wise, Hanuman replied as follows: 33. "For me who am going on Rama's errand, where is the need for food, where is the need for rest? My foremost duty is to proceed as quickly as possible without any delay." With these words he just touched the peak of the mountain with his hands, and proceeded towards Lanka.

(34-35). When he had covered a little distance after this incident, he was held up by a fierce demoness called Simhika, who, stationing herself amidst the waters, had the power to grip anything by catching its shadow. (36-37). Being caught by her, Hanuman of great prowess thought: "Who or what is this obstructing cause, curbing my speed? I do not see any one before me. It is very puzzling indeed!" Revolving in this way in his mind, Hanuman looked down. 38. Thereupon he saw the mighty and terrific form of Simihika. Immediately he swooped down to the surface of the sea in great anger, and killed that demoness with a kick of his feet.

(39-40). After that Hanuman rose up into the sky again and directed his course to the south. Soon he sighted the southern shore of the ocean full of many fruit-bearing trees, covered everywhere with creepers with luxuriant growth of flowers, and populated by various kinds of birds and beasts. He also saw the Trikuta mountain on the top of which was situated the city of Lanka. 41. He found that Lanka was surrounded by several high walls, one behind another and separated by extensive moats. He now began to think how he would enter such a well-protected city. He thought: 42. "At night, assuming a very small body, I shall enter Lanka protected by Ravana." Deciding so, he remained there till nightfall and then entered Lanka.

Confrontation with Lanka-Sri (43-58)

(43-45). Making his body very small, Hanuman now entered the city through its gate, where stood Lanka-Lakshmi, the spirit of Lanka, guarding the city in the form of a fierce Rakshasa woman. Seeing Hanuman entering the city, she challenged him, saying: "Who are you entering Lanka at night like a thief in the form of a monkey, without caring for me. Pray, what is your business here?" Saying so, with eyes reddened by anger, she gave a kick to Hanuman.

46. Hanuman, treating her as an insignificant opponent, delivered a punch on her with his left fist. Immediately she fell on the ground vomiting a large quantity of blood. 47. Lanka-Lakshmi soon stood up and said to that powerful Hanuman: "O Hanuman! Go in. Good fortune will attend you. O faultless one! Lanka has already been conquered by you. (48-49). In times gone by, Brahma told me the following: 'In the twenty-eighth Tretayuga of this cycle of time, Narayana, the Eternal Being, will incarnate Himself as Rama, the son of King Dasaratha, and His Yoga-maya will embody Herself as Sita in the house of Janaka. This is in consequence of my prayer to the Lord for relieving the earth of her burdens. 50. Rama with his wife and his brother will go to reside in the great forest of Dandaka. Then Ravana will abduct Sita, who is none but Mahamaya. 51. Subsequently, Rama will enter into an alliance with the monkey king Sugreeva, who will depute his monkey followers

When you suffer injury from his blow, know for certain that the end of Ravana would be near at hand.' (54-56). Therefore I deem that you have already conquered Lanka, O noble one! You have subdued every one and everything here. In the women's quarters of Ravana, there is a fine woody grove for sport and relaxation. In the middle of it there is a grove full of a very rare type of trees called Ashoka. In the centre of it stands a huge Simsapa tree. Sita, the daughter of Janaka, is confined there, securely protected by a guard of fearsome Rakshasa women. Meeting her, you return soon and convey the news to Rama. 57. For long have I been entertaining in my mind the thought of Rama which liberates one from the bondage of Samsara. Today I am indeed fortunate to have association with a devotee of his, which is ordinarily very difficult to get. May the Lord Rama ever dwell in my heart." 58. When Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, crossed the ocean, both Sita and Ravana got pronounced quivering of the left eye and arm, while for Rama, who transcends the senses, this happened on his right side.

HANUMAN'S SEARCH

Hanuman sees Sita (1-12)

1. Assuming a form of small size, Hanuman entered resplendent Lanka and walked through all parts of the city. (2-3). Engaged in the search for Sita, he entered the residential quarters of Ravana and searched everywhere there, but could not discover Sita in any place. Now remembering the words of Lanka-Sri, he directed his search towards the Ashoka grove. (4-6). That Ashoka grove into which Hanuman entered had in it a dense growth of heavenly trees, with tanks here and there having steps studded with precious gems. There many types of birds and animals were moving about amidst trees whose branches were touching the earth with the weight of fruits on them. Here and there, were terraced buildings shining like gold. The son of the Wind-god searched for Sita under every tree there but could not find her. Then he came to a towering building on a mount so high, that it looked as if it touched the sky. He was astonished to see the numerous pillars of precious stones in that edifice. (7-10). As he proceeded some distance further from it, he came across a Simsapa tree having so dense a foliage that it gave complete shelter from the sun. Its branches spread extensively, and there were many birds of golden colour perching on them. Underneath that tree, amidst a guard of Rakshasa women, he found Sita, the daughter of Janaka, who looked like a goddess on earth. Her locks were unbraided and her body had become extremely lean and weak. Dressed with a much soiled cloth, she was lying on the bare ground, extremely sorrow-stricken and crying, 'Rama, Rama' from time to time. Though she had every auspicious physical feature, she had become very lean by fasting and by the failure to find any way of being rescued from her plight. (11-12) Seated behind the shelter of the leaves of the Simsapa tree, that great monkey saw Sita and said within himself, "O I have achieved my purpose! I have achieved my purpose! I have accomplished the errand on which the Supreme Being, Rama, has sent me."

Ravana courting Sita (13-43)

(13-14). Now from outside the women's quarters of Ravana, Hanuman heard some jingling sounds, and wondering what it might be, he looked in that direction from his sheltered position amidst the leaves of the tree. To his great astonishment, he saw Ravana coming, surrounded by a bevy of women. Possessed of ten heads and twenty arms, he looked like a mountain of antimony.

(15-20). Meantime, Ravana had all along been thinking, "What could hasten my death at the hands of Rama? I do not find Rama as yet coming in quest of Sita. Why is it so?" Thinking thus always about Rama, Ravana had a dream the previous night. He saw in the dream that a monkey deputed by Rama, and capable of taking any form, had come assuming a very small form, and was watching from the top of the trees. Experiencing this wonderful dream, Ravana thought within himself: "Dreams sometime come true. So let me decide to do like this: I shall wound the feelings of Sita by harsh words and make her extremely sorrow-stricken. Let the monkey see it and report it to Rama." It was while thinking this way after he had this dream experience that he started to the place where Sita was confined.

21. Hearing the tinkling sound of anklets and tiny bells, Sita knew that Ravana was approaching, and she shrank into herself out of fear. That handsome lady now shed tears and kept gazing downwards, with her mind fully concentrated on Rama. (22-29). Now, seeing Sita in this condition, Ravana said to her, "O handsome lady! Why are you shrinking into yourself out of fear on seeing me? Rama, along with his brother Lakshmana, is living amidst forest tribes. He may be seen sometimes and sometimes not. I sent many spies to spot him. In spite of vigorous search everywhere they could not find him. What will you do with this Rama who does not seem to have any desire for you? You may always sit by his side embracing him; this Rama will never have any longing for you even then. All the delights that you can give him and all your excellences are known to him by experience, but still he has no feeling for you. He is a fool without any excellence. He is also thankless, O virtuous woman. I have carried you away into my abode and you are stricken with extreme grief because of it. Still he has not come to rescue you. Why do you then think of a man who has no love for you? He is without strength, self-respect and a sense of duty to his own people. Though an ignorant fool, he thinks of himself as a great scholar. O great beauty! What are you going to achieve by thinking of this low type of a man who has no inclination towards you? And in contrast, here am I, the greatest among Rakshasas, extremely infatuated with you. Why should you not then accept my advances? 30. If you accept me, you will become the mistress of the women of various species of beings like Devas, Gandharvas, Nagas, Yakshas and Kinnaras."

31. Angry at these words of Ravana, Sita put a blade of grass between him and herself, and began to speak with downcast eyes: (32-36). "Out of fear for Rama you put on the disguise of an ascetic, and when Rama and Lakshmana were out, you carried me away, O low born one! as a bitch knocks away some sacrificial offering. Soon, you shall reap the consequences of it, when your body will be rent asunder by Rama's arrows. You think of Rama as a mere man. You will understand the folly of it when you are soon despatched to the realm of Yama. Either by drying up the ocean or by bridging it by his arrows, Rama will come here with Lakshmana to destroy you. There is no doubt about it. O despicable Rakshasa! You will soon see how Rama destroys you along with all your sons and army, and takes me back to his city."

37. The stinging words of Sita roused the wrath of that King of the Rakshasas, and moved by extreme anger indicated by his reddened eyes, he lifted his sword and approached to strike at Sita. 38. But Mandodari, Ravana's wife, came between them and restrained him from his rash act, saying, "Leave off this human female who is griefstricken and famished. 39. You have got innumerable handsome women of Devas, Gandharvas and Nagas. They are always looking at you with love-lorn eyes." 40. Ravana then turned towards the Rakshasi guards of distorted faces and said to them: "Deal with this woman sternly by threats or kind persuasion in such a way that she is attracted to me and comes under my control. 41. If she comes under my control within two months, she will, along with me, have every kind of enjoyment available in this country. (42-43). If within two months, she does not agree to be my wife, you kill this human female and give her

Rakshasis' Threats and Trijata's Dream (44-55)

44. Immediately, the Rakshasa women began to terrify Sita with harsh words. One of them said to her, "Your youth is ebbing away without serving any purpose. If you live with Ravana, it will become fruitful." 45. Another said in an angry mood, "O Janaki why do you delay? Let us even now sever her limbs and cut them to pieces." 46. Another Rakshasa woman now raised her sword as if to kill Sita. Still another, having a terrific face, tried to frighten Sita by opening her formidable mouth. 47. But an elderly Rakshasa woman named Trijata restrained the others from frightening Sita and said, 48. "O cruel women! Hear my words for your own good. (49-54).

Do not frighten the weeping Sita. On the other hand, you prostrate before her. I have just now had a dream, which is as follows: The lotus-eyed Rama along with Lakshmana had burnt the whole of Lanka and killed Ravana in battle. Then he was seated at the top of the mountain with Sita on his lap. On the other hand, I saw Ravana naked and smeared all over with oil. Holding in his hand a garland made of his own heads, he was entering into a deep pit of dung along with all his sons and grandsons. Vibhishana, I saw on the contrary prostrating at Rama's feet with great devotion and doing service to Rama. Soon Rama will destroy Ravana with all his tribe and install Vibhishana as a ruler and will go back to his city carrying Sita with him. This is certainly going to happen." 55. Hearing these words of Trijata, the frightened Rakshasa women became silent and began to sleep lying here and there.

up in the morning. There is no doubt about it. So is there any way by which I can die even now?" 58. Thus steeped in grief and weeping aloud, Sita, failing to see any way out, decided to kill herself and remained there for some time, holding a branch of the tree.

HANUMAN DELIVERING RAMA'S MESSAGE TO SITA

Hanuman's stratagem to draw Sita's attention (1-19)

1. Sita thought within herself: "I shall free myself from this body that is separated from Rama, by hanging myself. What is the good of living in the midst of these Rakshasa women? My locks are pretty long and are enough to put a knot on my neck." (2-3). Hanuman saw Sita, the daughter of Janaka, in this condition, determined to kill herself. He thought for a while and then adopting a small form spoke the following words just loud enough to reach the ears of Sita. (4-15). He said, "In the line of Ikshvakus, there was a great king called Dasaratha ruling over Ayodhya. He has four famous sons equal to divinities, possessed of all auspicious signs and qualities. Their names are Rama, Lakshmana, Bharata and Satrughna. Of them the eldest brother, in compliance with his father's order, had come to reside in the forest of Dandaka accompanied by his brother Lakshmana and wife Sita. They were staying at Panchavati on the banks of the Godavari. When Rama was away from his abode, the wicked Ravana abducted his wife, the worshipful Sita. Extremely sorrow-stricken by this, Rama instituted a search for Sita and in the course of it came across the kingly vulture Jatayu lying fallen on the ground. Sending him to the heavenly realm, Rama soon reached the Rishyamuka mountain. There Sugreeva entered into an alliance with the high-souled Rama. Rama helped his ally Sugreeva by destroying Vali who had deprived Sugreeva of his wife, and afterwards installing Sugreeva as the king. Now King Sugreeva gathered together his monkey followers and sent them to search for Sita. Myself, one of them, who is a minister of Sugreeva, has, as directed by the vulture named Sampati, managed to cross over the ocean a hundred Yojanas wide and reach the city of Lanka. Searching here slowly every where, I have come to the Asoka grove and therein the Simsapa tree. Here I see Rama's consort Sita sitting immersed in sorrow. Having come here I have accomplished my mission." Saying this much, the intelligent Hanuman resumed silence.

(16-19). Sita listened to the whole narrative step by step with great astonishment and entered into the following soliloquy: "What is it that I just now heard from the sky above! Is it the speech of the Wind-deity? Or is it a dream or a delusion of mine? Or is it a true experience? Grief has deprived me of sleep and therefore it cannot be a dream. And how can it be a delusion too? Let that great personage, who spoke these welcome words, which are like nectar to my ears, appear before me, if the words are factual." Hearing these words of Sita, Hanuman slowly emerged from the thick foliage of the trees and stood before her.

Hanuman's Conversation with Sita (20-36)

20. A monkey of the size of the bird called Kalavinga, yellow in colour but red in face, now came forward slowly, made prostration to Sita and stood before her. (21-22). On seeing him, Sita was at first frightened, thinking that Ravana, who was a master of the magical art, had again come disguised as a monkey to deceive her. So she sat there silently with downcast eyes. (23-24). Divining Sita's fear, Hanuman said again to Sita: "O divine lady! I am not at all what you suspect me to be. So please cast away all your suspicions about me. I am the servant of the Supreme Being incarnated as Rama, the King of Kosala. I am also the minister of Sugreeva the king of the monkeys. I am the offspring of Vayu, the Wind-deity, who is the Cosmic Prana of the universe."

(25-29). Hearing these words, Sita, the daughter of Janaka, asked Hanuman, who was standing before her with palms joined in salutation: "You say you are a servant of Sri Ramachandra. How has this kind of an alliance between men and monkeys come into existence? How is it believable?" Thereupon, Hanuman, the son of the Wind-deity, said to Sita, facing her: "The high-souled Rama, as directed by the ascetic woman Sabari, went to Mount Rishyamooka. Sugreeva, who had taken shelter on Rishyamooka, was frightened to see Rama and Lakshmana approaching and sent me to them to know their real intention. In the form of a Brahmacharin I approached Rama, and on becoming sure that his intentions were good, I took both the brothers on my shoulders to the presence of Sugreeva and arranged for an alliance between Rama and Sugreeva. (30-32). Sugreeva's wife had been forcibly taken away by Vali. That Vali, Sri Rama killed with a single arrow, and installed Sugreeva as the king of the monkeys. Sugreeva deputed very powerful monkeys to institute a search for your venerable self. When Rama saw me among the search party getting ready to start, he called me aside and spoke to me lovingly. (33-34). He said: 'O Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god! The success of this enterprise of mine depends entirely on you. Convey to Sita all news about the welfare of Lakshmana and myself. Here is my signet ring with my name engraved on it. Present it to Sita as a token for recognising you as a genuine messenger.' (35-36). With these words Rama took off the ring from his finger and handed it over to me. I have taken every care to preserve it and bring it with me. O high-souled lady! 'Here it is.' With these words Hanuman presented the ring to Sita, and then prostrating before her, withdrew a little and stood holding his joined palms on his head in salutation.

(37-44). Seeing the signet ring of Rama with his name engraved on it, Sita was overwhelmed with joy. With tears streaming down her face, she took the ring and placed it on her head in adoration.

She then said, "O monkey! You are verily the saviour of my life. You are highly intelligent, whole-heartedly devoted to Rama and bent on doing what is pleasing to him. Rama must have reposed absolute confidence in you, for he would not have selected an unknown stranger as a messenger to me. O Hanuman! You have seen in what a miserable state I am. You report about all this to Rama in a way that will produce intense compassion in his mind. O noble one! I have now only two more months of life. If Rama does not come and rescue me within that time, this wicked fellow will eat me up. If within that time the lordly Rama comes over here with the monkey king Sugreeva and his monkey forces, and destroys Ravana with his whole family and army and releases me—then his heroic achievement will be a topic of narration and praise for generations to come. O hero! Report in such a way that he feels forced to kill Ravana at the earliest and rescue me. O Hanuman! Do your best to achieve this. Through your words you will then be achieving a great and righteous purpose."

(45-46). To this appeal of Sita, Hanuman replied: "O divine lady! Immediately I return and meet Rama and Lakshmana, they will come along with Sugreeva and his army, all fully equipped with weapons, and destroy Ravana and take you back to Ayodhya. There is no doubt about this."

47. On hearing this, Sita put him a question: "How will Rama the great cross the wide ocean with the generals of the monkey army and come to this place?" (48-51). For clearing her doubt Hanuman replied: "Those two great men will arrive riding on my shoulders. Sugreeva with his monkey army will leap across the ocean through the sky. Crossing the ocean in this way, they will, for your sake, reduce the whole of this tribe of Rakshasas to ashes. Please have no doubt about this. Now, O great lady, give me permission to return. It is necessary that I return very soon, so that I may meet the two brothers, come back here fetching them, and meet you again at the earliest opportunity. Now give me some thing as a token that will be recognised by Rama and will make him convinced that I have actually seen you. Rama will then come here soon in high spirits fully prepared."

Sita Gives the Crest-jewel and Narrates the Crow Incident (52-88)

52. Sita, the lotus-eyed, then thought for a while, and taking from within her locks a crest-jewel handed it over to Hanuman saying, "O noble monkey! This will enable Rama along with Lakshmana to accept the veracity of your report. (53-61). Further as a token for recognition, I shall tell you something more, O pure-souled one! Some-time back when we were staying in Chitrakuta, Rama was one day sleeping in privacy with his head resting on my lap. Now there came a son of Indra in the form of a crow, and with a view to get some flesh to eat, began to tear my crimson-tinged toes with his beak and claws. Meanwhile, Rama woke up, and seeing my wounded feet, exclaimed, 'Who is it that has done this offence against me?' . Seeing the crow with bloodstained face and claws attacking me repeatedly, he got angry at it, and invoking a divine missile. in a blade of grass, threw it at the crow. The divine missile went flaming towards the crow, which thereupon flew away to save itself. It flew to all the realms in the universe followed by the missile. Finding that even celestials like Brahma could not give it shelter from the missile, it at last came to Rama and fell at his feet in great fright seeking refuge. Rama then told the crow: 'This missile of mine cannot go in vain. Give one of your eyes as a target for it, and go away from here.' Its left eye was destroyed by the missile and the crow then went away. How is it that Rama of such invincible puissance has chosen to neglect me unvindicated?"

(62-64). Hearing the words of Sita, Hanuman said to her, "O respected lady! If Rama, the greatest of Raghu's line, comes to know that you are here, he would reduce this glorious city of the Rakshasas into ashes in no time." Thereupon Sita asked him, "Dear one! You are of a small size and so must be the other monkeys too. How will you fight the Rakshasas?" At these words of Sita, Hanuman revealed his real form to her. (65-66). It was of the size of the mountain Meru and capable of terrifying the Rakshasas. She was glad to see that mountain-like form of Hanuman and said to that great monkey hero,

"O paragon of strength! You will indeed be capable of accomplishing what you say. Now these Raksha women will notice you of tremendous size and strength. So leave this place immediately and hurry on to Rama. I wish you a happy return journey." 67. Hanuman who was by now very hungry asked, "After having met you, may I not satisfy my hunger a little? You need not in any way be concerned thinking what you could give me to eat. I shall be able to satisfy my hunger with all the fruits in these trees before you." 68. Being permitted to do so by Sita, Hanuman ate all those fruits. Sita then gave him permission once again to go. He started after prostrating before her. But having gone some distance, he began to think within himself.

(69-71). He thought: "A messenger who has been sent for one purpose, if he returns merely after accomplishing his mission but without doing something more in extension of it, is the most inferior type of a messenger. Therefore, I will accomplish something more here and try to meet Ravana and talk with him. After that I shall proceed to meet Rama." Resolving like this in his mind, the mighty Hanuman began to pull out the trees of that Ashoka grove and soon made that place devoid of all trees. (72-73). With the exception of the tree under which Sita was sitting, what was previously a grove became almost a bare ground. By that time the Rakshasa women, getting sight of Hanuman uprooting the trees, asked Sita, "Who is that fellow who has the form of a monkey but seems to be a great fighter too?" (74-75). Sita replied, "The secret of these magical feats of Rakshasas is known to you only and not to me, distressed as I am by intense sorrow. I know nothing about this monkey." The Rakshasis were now filled with fear and reported to Ravana about all that Hanuman did in the Ashoka grove. 76. They said, "O great king! A gigantic figure in the form of a monkey and possessed of great strength, after having conversed with Sita, has uprooted the trees of the Ashoka grove in no time and has also levelled the mansion on the mound. (77-78). After killing all the guards of the mansion, he is now standing there." On hearing about the destruction of the Ashoka grove, which was very dear to him, Ravana got up immediately in great anger and despatched a large body of his troops called Kinkaras.

(79-80). Where the mansion once stood the Kinkaras now saw Hanuman, mountain-like in size, terrific in form, red in face, equipped with an iron pillar as weapon and slowly moving his tail. At the sight of the advancing Rakshasa army, Hanuman gave out a lion-roar, at which many of his opponents fell unconscious. 81. On seeing Hanuman of frightening form, who had killed all the Rakshasa guards of the mansion earlier, the newly arrived Rakshasa troops attacked him with all kinds of weapons. 82. Hanuman now rushed at the Rakshasa troops, and striking at them on all sides with an iron mace, made a paste of them like a lordly elephant crushing mosquitoes.

83. The news of the destruction of the Kinkaras raised the wrath of Ravana to its summit, and he sent against Hanuman his five generals who were possessed of great war-lust. 84. Hanuman killed all of them with iron mace-pebble, and angry Ravana thereupon sent the seven sons of his ministers next. (85-86). That monkey lord, the son of the Wind-god, quickly despatched all of them too with his iron mace in no time and stationed himself in the same old place awaiting more Rakshasas to come for attack.

Now came for battle, the powerful Akshakumara, the youngest son of Ravana. 87. As Akshakumara advanced, Hanuman leaped at him through the skies and delivered a fatal blow on his head with his iron mace. 88. After thus killing Akshakumara, Hanuman did the same with the troops whom he was leading.

Indrajit binds Hanuman (89-100)

89. The news of the death of his son Aksha incensed Ravana in the extreme and he now summoned his eldest son Indrajit, the victor over Indra. 90. Ravana said, "O my son! I am now going to attack that fellow who killed my boy Aksha. I shall now bring him to you, either killed or bound." (91-93). Thereupon Indrajit said to his father, "O high souled one! Abandon grief. you giving yourself up to grief so much? O father! Binding the monkey with the Brahma missile, I shall bring him to you very soon." With these words, heroic Indrajit sallied forth against the Wind-god's son, surrounded by a large body of Rakshasa troops. (94-96). Hearing the loud and tumultuous sound of the Rakshasa forces, Hanuman rose into the sky with the iron mace raised in his hand. As he hovered over the army like an eagle, Indrajit wounded him with arrows. He shot eight arrows on his head, six at his chest and legs, and one at his tail. Thus wounding him all over, Indrajit gave out a terrific lion-roar. 97. Hanuman of great prowess, delighted at this opportunity for battle, raised his iron mace, and delivering blows with it, killed Indrajit's charioteer and reduced his chariot along with its horses to powder. 98. Powerful Indrajit now ascended another chariot and releasing his Brahma-missile, bound up the mighty Hanuman and took him to Ravana.

(99-100). He, by uttering whose name constantly Jivas get release from the bondage of Karma born of ignorance, and attain the status Divine which is of the nature of Supreme Bliss more luminous than countless suns—that Rama's feet were ever established in the heart of Hanuman, and all his bondage of Samsara had thereby been removed. For such a person, what harm can the bondage of cords or missiles do?

Chapter 4

THE BURNING OF LANKA

Hanuman As Captive (1-14).

1. Holding with his hands the binding cords as if in pain, and looking at the city here and there as if in fright, Hanuman allowed himself to be led by the Rakshasas through the streets of Lanka. To see him, the angry Rakshasa citizens followed the party, raining blows on him with their fists. 2. On account of the boon given by Brahma, Hanuman was released from the bondage of that Brahma missile within a short time. He knew it, but yet he allowed himself to be subjected to bondage by inconsequential cords and went with his captors in order that he may fulfil an important purpose. 3. Hanuman was now brought before Ravana who was seated in the assembly of his ministers and courtiers. Presenting him, Indrajit said, "With the help of the boon given to me by Brahma, I have been able to bind and bring before you this monkey who was responsible for the slaughter of so many Asuras. 4. O father! Order whatever you decide about him in consultation with your ministers. He is not an ordinary monkey." Thereupon, that lord of the Rakshasas looked at his minister Prahasta who was of the complexion of an antimony mountain, and was then standing before him. 5. He said: "O Prahasta! Question him on these lines: 'Why has this monkey come over here?

What is his business here? Where does he come from? Why did he destroy my Ashoka grove? Why has he killed my Rakshasa troops by force?" 6. Thereupon Prahasta in obedience to his master's order, questioned Hanuman politely: "O monkey! Who has sent you over here? Do not entertain any fear. I shall get you released, if you tell the truth about yourself before His majesty, the king of all kings."

7. Thereupon Hanuman, delighted to see face to face the enemy Ravana, the oppressor of the three worlds, and remembering Rama again and again within himself, started narrating the sanctifying story of Rama from the very beginning. 8. He said: "O Ravana, the enemy of the Devas! Listen to me carefully. I am the messenger of Rama, who resides in the hearts of all beings. You have recently, stolen away his wife, like a dog stealthily taking away sacrificial offerings. You have thereby paved the way for your own destruction. 9. Know that coming to the Rishyamuka mountain, Rama has entered into an alliance with Sugreeva before the sacred fire as witness, and subsequently killed Vali with a single arrow and installed Sugreeva as the king of the kingdom of the monkeys. 10. That powerful king of the monkeys is now staying in great anger on Mount Praharshana along with Rama and Lakshmana and a huge army of powerful monkeys. 11. That monkey king has deputed powerful monkey leaders to search and find out the whereabouts of Sita. I, the off-spring of the Wind-god, am one such monkey come here after much search. (12-13). I have been able to find out the lotus-eyed Sita. Being a monkey, my nature prompted me to destroy the trees of the Ashoka grove. Thereafter I found many of your emissaries equipped with bows and arrows coming in great anger to attack and kill me. So I had to kill them in defence of myself. O great king! You know very well how dear one's body is to all creatures. Finally Meghanada (Indrajit) came to put me in bondage with the Brahma missile. 14. Because of a boon given to me by Brahma, the effect of that missile lasted only for a moment; and I was released after that. O Ravana! I know this fact, but yet out of pity for you, I wanted to give you some good advice, and so allowed myself to be brought here, as if I were still in bondage.

Hanuman's sermon to Ravana (15-26)

15. "By the practice of discrimination, understand the extremely trivial and temporary nature of this world, O Ravana, and with the help of that understanding, abandon your evil nature of a Rakshasa.

For the ultimate good of your soul, practice virtuous conduct that will lead to liberation from the travails of Samsara. 16. You are born in the great lineage of Brahma, being the son of Rishi Pulastya and the brother of Kubera. So, even granting the wrong view that the self of one is the body, you are not a Rakshasa in a physical sense even. And from the point of view of the spirit, it is needless to say that there is no Rakshasahood in you.

17. "The real 'You' or the Self has none of the series of miseries arising from body, intellect and the senses, because the real 'you' is only the unperturbed and unaffected witness of all these changes. The actual involvement in these changes belongs to the body-mind complex. It is just like the experience of one sleeping. The series of dream experiences which sleep brings about, end with the dream; they are the effects of the delusive ignorance characteristic of sleep. As far as the real Self is concerned, the bodily experiences are unreal in the same way. 18. This unperturbedness and unaffectedness is the truth in regard to the nature of your real Self. You are by nature changeless; for the Self being non-dual, there can be no cause to effect change in it. Like the all-pervading Akasa which pervades objects but is not affected by it, your real Self, though pervading the body, is not affected by the bodily experiences because of its subtlety. 19. All bondage arises from the sense of identification of the complex—body-mind-Prana—with the real Self. And liberation consists in experiencing: 'I am Pure Consciousness, I am the Unbound I am the Deathless, I am pure Bliss.' 20. The body which is born of the element earth is not the Self. Nor is Prana the Atman, because it is a modification of the element air. Mind too is not the Self, because it is an effect of Ahamkara, the I-sense. As for Buddhi, intellect, it is a modification of Prakriti and is not the Self.

21. The Atman is Pure Consciousness and Bliss, He is devoid of changes like birth and death, and He, being separate from the body-mind combination, is only their witness and director. He is separate from all adjuncts through which He manifests. By himself He is ever pure. Knowing the Atman as such, one attains liberation from the bondage of Samsara.

22. "Therefore, I shall now tell you the means for attaining ultimate liberation. Hear it attentively. O intelligent one! Listen to it carefully. First of all cultivate devotion to Maha-Vishnu. That will purify your intellect and you will thereby gain pure knowledge too. 23. You will then have the knowledge of the ever-pure and unaffected Truth. This knowledge being fully established, you will attain to the Supreme Status of Brahman. Therefore, worship with all devotion Rama who is none but Hari, the consort of Lakshmi, who transcends Prakriti and is all-pervading. 24. Abandoning your stupidity and your mood of antagonism, take shelter at the feet of Rama, to whom all who surrender are very dear. Along with your sons and relatives, take Sita to Rama and restore her to him, making a full prostration as the sign of your submission. Then you will be free from fear. 25. How can thoughtless persons cross over the ocean of Samsara with waves of misery raging in it, without taking shelter in Rama, with perfect devotion—Rama who is the essence of Bliss, Non-dual Being and Supreme Self residing in the hearts of all? 26. If you do not do this, you will sink into the depths of spiritual degradation without anyone to protect you from the burning fire of ignorance.

Sentence of torture by fire on Hanuman (27-36)

27. Hearing these nectar-like words of Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, the ten-headed Rakshasa, Ravana, felt unbearable anger, and in high excitement and with eyes reddened, said to that lordly monkey: 28. "Who are you to talk this kind of nonsense before me without any fear? You must be the most degenerate and evil-minded among the monkeys. Who is this Rama? Who is this forest dweller Sugreeva? Look, you fool of a monkey! I am going to kill that evil man who has sought alliance with Sugreeva. 29. But you are going to be killed immediately, and then Sita, the daughter of Janaka. After that, before long,

I am going to destroy Rama and Lakshmana and the powerful monkey Sugreeva along with all his followers." Hearing these words of the ten-headed Ravana, Hanuman, the son of Wind-god, was inflamed with anger and said as follows in a threatening mood, as if he were going to burn him up.

30. He said: "O most degenerate fellow! Even a crore of Ravanas will not be equal to me; for I, the messenger of Rama, have inexhaustible puissance." These words of Hanuman drove Ravana to a mad fury, and he said, addressing a Rakshasa standing nearby: 31. "Kill this monkey, cutting him into pieces. Let all other Asuras and friends and relatives witness this execution." Thereupon, Vibhishana intervened and warded off the Asura who was advancing with his weapon for the execution. 32. Vibhishana said, "O great king! He is a monkey sent as a messenger by another king. How can a monarch noted for his courage and nobility order him to be killed? That is highly improper. 33. If you kill this messenger monkey now, how can Rama, whose destruction is your ultimate purpose, come to know that Sita is here, and go over to Lanka for battle? (34-35). Therefore, think of some other kind of punishment that is equal to execution. Let the monkey go with the marks of punishment inflicted on his body. Seeing him, Rama will soon come here with Sugreeva and engage himself in battle with you." On hearing these words of Vibhishana, Ravana said as follows: (36-37). "Monkeys are very proud of their tail. Therefore, let his tail be wrapped with cloth and set fire to. Let him then be dragged through the whole city and then allowed to go away, so that all the leaders of the monkey army may see him in that deformed condition."

(38-40). Afterwards, the Rakshasas wrapped round Hanuman's tail pieces of sack and various kinds of cloth soaked in oil and set fire to the tip of the tail. They then bound him up with cords and a group of powerful Rakshasas carried him round the city to the beating of drums and declaring again and again, "Come and see! Here is the thief—" all the while people raining blows on him. (41-44). With a strategem in his mind, Hanuman bore all that persecution patiently. On reaching the western gate, he shrunk his body into a small size and thus released himself from the bondage of all the cords. Then he again assumed his gigantic size and leaped on to the top of the gate-tower, and pulling out one of the pillars of that edifice, smashed all the Rakshasa emissaries. In order to complete his work in Lanka, he hopped from one building to another in the city with his burning tail and set fire to all the mansions and other edifices there. 45. Now was heard everywhere in Lanka, the cries of women, 'O father', 'O son', 'O husband'! Many a Rakshasa women got on to the top of buildings in order to escape from fire, only to find that the fire had spread all around. 46. As beings drop from the skies, these Rakshasa women fell into the fire from above. With the exception of Vibhishana's house, all Lanka was thus reduced to ashes. 47. Having done all these, Hanuman jumped into the sea and extinguished the fire on his tail by dipping it into water. He now felt satisfied that he had accomplished his task. 48. Thanks to the friendship of the Fire-deity with the Wind-deity, the father of Hanuman, and thanks to Sita's prayers, the fire did not burn his tail in the least. On the other hand, he felt it as very cool. 49. He, by uttering whose name men are rid of the effects of all the sins, by which men in this world overcome the three fires of life (Tāpatraya)—to the special messenger of that Rama, how can this ordinary fire of this world inflict injury?

HANUMAN'S TRIUMPHANT RETURN

Hanuman bids farewell to Sita and returns (1-17).

(1-4). Afterwards Hanuman went to see Sita, made prostrations to her and said, "O great lady! Now give me permission to return to Rama. Rama, along with his brother, will come soon to see you." With these words, he circumambulated Sita thrice, made prostrations to her again and made ready to go. He now addressed the following words to Sita, "O noble lady! I am now starting. Good fortune will soon dawn on you. Accompanied by a huge army, Sugreeva, Rama and Lakshmana will be seen here in this city very soon." To Hanuman, Sita said sorrow-stricken:

5. "Seeing you, I have forgotten all my sorrows. Alas, now you are going. How can I now sustain my life without hearing about Rama?" 6. Hanuman replied to Sita saying, "If that be the case, O noble lady, you get on my shoulders. If you want, I shall then take you in no time to Rama's presence." (7-9). Now Sita said, "Let Rama come along with the monkey army, drying the sea or bridging it with arrows, kill Ravana in battle and rescue me. Then Rama will gain everlasting fame. Therefore, you go now. I shall somehow sustain my life." Being thus permitted to go once again, Hanuman made prostrations to her and then went to the top of the mountain Trikuta in order to prepare for crossing the sea.

10. In his effort to leap, Hanuman of tremendous size pressed his legs with such force on the mountain that the latter went deep into the bowels of the earth. With the speed of wind, he lifted himself up in the sky. 11. Due to the force generated, that mountain, which was thirty Yojanas in height, became levelled to the ground. Ascending to the sky, Hanuman gave out a terrific roar. 12. That sound reached the ears of the monkey hosts on the other shore of the ocean, and in great glee, they all together shouted in return like an echo. (13-14). "After achieving his object, Hanuman is returning. From the sound he has produced we can know it. O monkeys! Wait and see the arrival of that leader of ours." As the monkey chiefs were speaking thus amongst themselves, the son of the Wind-god descended on the top of a mountain and said to the monkeys thus: (15-17). "I have discovered Sita and I have destroyed Lanka along with its woody groves. I spoke with Ravana. I am now returning after achieving all these. Now we shall go to the presence of Rama and Sugreeva." When Hanuman spoke these words, all the monkeys were delighted. Some embraced Hanuman. Some kissed their tails, and some others danced enthusiastically. They all started along with Hanuman to mount Prasravana where Rama was staying.

Destruction of Madhuvana (18-15)

18. As the monkeys were travelling, they reached the forest named Madhu, which was under Sugreeva's special protection. Then all those monkey leaders said to Angada as follows: 19. "O hero! We are all extremely hungry. If you, our noble-minded leader, give us permission, we would like to eat the fruits and drink the sweet honey abounding in this forest. 20. Satisfied with eating and drinking, we shall go immediately to the presence of Rama and Lakshmana.” 21. Angada thereupon said, “Here is Hanuman, who has fulfilled the mission on which we are sent. In honour of him, O monkey-chiefs, consume the fruits and roots quickly and be on the move.” (22-23). The monkeys now began to consume the honey. Noticing it, Dadhimukha, the keeper of the forest, sent a body of his guards to ward them off. But without minding them, the monkeys continued to consume the honey. When the forest guards attempted to beat the monkeys, they gave them kicks and blows, and continued to eat and drink.

24. Now Dadhimukha was an uncle of Sugreeva. Extremely angry at the conduct of the monkeys, he along with his forest guards went to the place where Sugreeva was staying. 25. And he said to the king

“O master! The Madhuvana that you have been maintaining for such a long time has been destroyed today by prince Angada and Hanuman.” (26-27). On hearing Dadhimuka’s representation, Sugreeva said in a joyous mood: “The son of the Wind-god must have certainly discovered Sita. There is no doubt about it. Otherwise, who would have dared even to look at my Madhuvana? Therefore their action only indicates that Hanuman has succeeded in his mission. There is no doubt about this.”

28. Delighted at these words of Sugreeva, Rama asked him, “O royal friend! What is it that you are speaking about Sita?” (29-34). Hearing these words, Sugreeva said, “O noble one! Sita has been discovered. Hanuman and other monkeys are reported to have entered Madhuvana and eaten everything there and attacked the guards. Unless they have achieved the purpose of your divine Self, they would not have dared even to look at my Madhuvana. So from their action you can infer that they have certainly discovered Sita." And turning to his guards he said, "O guards! Entertain no fear. Returning to your place, communicate to Angada and others that it is my order that they return soon." The forest guards on hearing Sugreeva's words returned very soon and said to Hanuman and others, "It is the order of the King that you return soon. Sugreeva, along with Rama and Lakshmana, is anxious to meet you. Those powerful personages are immensely delighted with your conduct. They want to see you immediately." Hearing these words of Dadhimukha and his guards, the monkey leaders proceeded quickly through the sky. 35. With Hanuman and the heir apparent Angada leading

Hanuman's report to Rama (36-64)

(36-42). Hanuman now reported to Rama, "I have seen Sita in a healthy condition." Then he first prostrated before Rama and next before Sugreeva, and continued: "O great King! Sita, the daughter of Janaka, has in a very joyous mood asked me about your welfare. Surrounded by a guard of Rakshasa women, she is kept in the Ashoka grove underneath a Simsapa tree. O great one! Lean because of abstinence from food, she is always bemoaning, calling out 'O Rama, O Rama'. I saw her dressed in soiled clothes, with locks unbraided. I was able to comfort her a little. Hiding myself in a diminutive form amidst the branches, I began to narrate your story from birth onwards. Your departure to the formidable forest of Dandaka, Ravana's abduction of Sita in your absence, your entering into alliance with Sugreeva, the destruction of Vali, Sugreeva's deputation of powerful and quick-moving monkey teams in search of Sita in all directions, and the arrival of one of them, myself, in Lanka—all these I narrated.

43. I further said in conclusion: 'I am the minister of Sugreeva and the servant of Rama. Overcoming very great difficulties, I have now been able to discover the daughter of Janaka.' (44-46) Hearing these words of mine, Sita said with wide-open eyes: 'Who is speaking all these words that are like nectar to my ears? If what you say is all genuine you must appear before my eyes.' Then I appeared and prostrated myself before Sita in the form of a small monkey, and with my palms joined in salutation, stood at a little distance from her. I gave replies to the detailed questions she put to me about myself and all other matters.

47. O valiant hero! I told her everything in proper order. Afterwards I presented to her the signet ring that you had sent with me. (48-52). Convinced now of my bona fides she said to me, 'O Hanuman! Tell Rama what you have seen—how I am living day and night under the oppression of these Rakshasa women.' To her I replied, 'Rama, who is constantly thinking of you, is sorrowing day and night that there is no news about you. Returning to him immediately, I shall report everything. Be sure that immediately after knowing the facts, Rama and Lakshmana, accompanied by Sugreeva and his army of monkeys will come to you. Destroying Ravana along with his whole tribe, he will take you back to your place. Now please give me some token of recognition which will make Rama convinced that I really met you.' (53-56). On my requesting her in this way, she gave me a crest-jewel from inside her locks. She also told me the story of the crow, which took place formerly at the Chitrakuta mountain. Then with tears flowing down her eyes, she added, 'Convey my enquiries about his welfare to Rama. Ask Lakshmana to excuse me for my thoughtless and unseemly speech to him. Then kindly do everything that may help Rama to rescue me at the earliest.' Speaking in this way, Sita began to weep, steeped in deep sorrow. I tried my best to comfort her with words concerning you.

(57-62). "Afterwards, O Rama, I made preparations to come back with the permission of the Devi. But before starting I did something more. I destroyed the Ashoka grove that is very dear to Ravana. Then I killed many Rakshasas including a son of Ravana. I got an opportunity to speak face to face with Ravana. Then after setting fire to the whole of Lanka, I have come back immediately to you." Hearing these words of Hanuman, Rama was extremely delighted and said to him, "You have done something that is very difficult even for Devas to achieve. I find no way of making adequate returns to the service you have done me. O son of the Wind-god! I now offer to you all that I have." Speaking in this way, with tears flowing from his eyes, Rama held Hanuman in his tight embrace and felt great delight. Rama, the lover of devotees, next said to Hanuman as follows:

63. He said, "In this world it is very difficult for any one to be embraced in this manner by Me, the Supreme Spirit. Therefore, O the noblest of monkeys! You are My devotee and one dear to Me." 64. He by worshipping whose lotus-feet with Tulasi and other ingredients one attains to the unparalleled Status of Vishnu—when one is embraced by that Being manifested as Rama, what doubt is there that such a person will attain to the summit of spiritual excellence?

Chapter 1

THE MONKEY ARMY ON THE MARCH TO LANKA

Deliberations of Rama with Sugreeva and Hanuman (1-26)

1. Delighted at what Hanuman spoke, Rama said: 2. 'Hanuman has performed a task which is impossible of achievement with great effort even by Devas. None in this world can do even in imagination what he has done. 3. Who can leap over the sea a hundred Yojanas wide?' Who can destroy Lanka which is defended on all sides by Rakshasas? 4. As a servant of Sugreeva, he has fully and perfectly achieved the task that was set for him. Such a servant has never existed before in this world and will never exist in future. 5. By Hanuman's discovery of Sita, he has saved the honour of myself, of the royal line of Raghu, of Lakshmana and of Sugreeva, the king of monkeys. 6. The search and the discovery of Sita has been fully accomplished. Now what is to be done hereafter? My mind reels when I think of crossing that ocean which Hanuman has achieved so easily. 7. How shall I be able to rescue Sita, killing the enemy after crossing this ocean of a hundred Yojanas extent, full of dangerous aquatic creatures like sharks and crocodiles?"

8. Hearing these words of Rama, Sugreeva said to him, "We shall be able to cross this ocean abounding in dangerous creatures like crocodiles and sharks 9. We shall sack Lanka and kill Ravana. O Lord of Raghu's line! Abandon all worrying thoughts. Such worrying thoughts stand in the way of one's achieving one's objective. 10. Here are these huge monkeys ready to please you by doing anything, if necessary even by passing through fire. 11. First let us think of the ways and means of crossing the ocean. Once we gain access to Lanka, then believe me, it is as good as our having killed Rayana. 12. O Lord of the Raghus! I do not find anyone in the three worlds who can stand in the battlefield against you equipped with your bow. 13. O Rama! Everywhere I see omens indicating that victory will surely be ours."

14. Accepting these words of Sugreeva

couched in a language that was both devotional and heroic, Rama now said to Hanuman standing before him: 15. "We might somehow manage to cross the great ocean. After that how shall we proceed? You therefore describe to me the features of this Lanka which is said to be difficult for even Devas and Asuras to penetrate. 16. O great monkey! After knowing from you the difficulties of entering Lanka, we shall think of the strategy for overcoming them." At these words of Rama, Hanuman, joining his palms in salutation, said to Rama with great humility: "O great one! I shall describe the features of Lanka as I saw. (17-18). The city of Lanka is situated on the heights of the Trikuta mountain in a heavenly set-up. Filled with buildings and walls golden in appearance, it is surrounded by moats that are full of pure water.

19. It is full of beautiful flower gardens, extensive tanks, pillars of precious stones, and mansions of great splendour. 20. At its western gate, regiments of elephants are stationed and in the northern, regiments of cavalry and infantry. 21. In the same way numerous troops of heroic Rakshasas are stationed at the eastern and southern gates of Lanka too. 22. O Lord! In the middle of the city also are stationed innumerable elephants, horses, chariots and foot soldiers with leaders well versed in the use of all missiles. 23. Lanka is defended with all these troops, besides with rockets (Sataghni) that can kill a hundred people at a time. Though defended so strongly in this way, hear, O Lord, what I was able to do there. 24. A fourth of Ravana's forces was destroyed. The city was set fire to and its golden gate towers were shattered to pieces. 25. I could destroy its batteries and secret places of defence. I see that by your very look, you will be able to reduce Lanka to ashes. 26. O Supreme Lord! We can start immediately, with the army of heroic monkeys on all sides, and proceed to the shore of the ocean."

The army on the march (27-48)

27. Hearing Hanuman's speech Rama said, "O Sugreeva! Order your armies to march. (28-29). The auspicious time indicating victory has already begun. I shall start at this time with a view to destroy that well-defended Lanka along with Ravana and the whole tribe of Rakshasas inhabiting it. I shall succeed in rescuing Sita also. My right eye is throbbing, indicating that good fortune awaits us. 30. Let the armies of powerful monkeys march forward. Let the leaders take positions behind, in front and on the sides to guard the forces. 31. I shall travel in front mounting the shoulders of Hanuman, and Lakshmana behind me on Angada, and you, O Sugreeva, should march with me. (32-33). On all the sides of the forces, let all the army leaders march—the leaders of great destructive capacity like Gaya, Gavaya, Gavaksha, Mainda, Dwivida, Nala, Neela, Sushena and Jambavan." Giving these orders to the monkey forces, the all powerful Rama along with Sugreeva and Lakshmana started with the army. 34. All the monkey troops, capable of assuming any form and equal to the heavenly elephant Airavata in power, marched towards the southern sea, demonstrating war-like movements and giving out terrific war cries. (35-36). Consuming all the fruits and honey on the way and declaring their resolve to destroy Ravana, all these monkey leaders of unparalleled power moved on. 37. The two leaders of Raghu's clan, riding on the shoulders of the monkey leaders amidst these monkey forces, looked like the sun and the moon accompanied by luminous stars. (38-40). The countless monkey heroes of the army filling all space struck the ground with their tails, pulled out trees as their weapons, and climbed over mountains as they moved on with the speed of wind. That army of tremendous size, led and protected by Rama, marched with great enthusiasm by day and by night without rest.

(41-44). Seeing the grand forests of mounts Malaya and Sahya they joyously passed through those mountain ranges and duly reached the sea-shore, where the roaring sound of the ocean could be heard. Descending from the shoulder of Hanuman, Rama along with Sugreeva went to the sea-shore. He said, "We have all now reached the shore of the mighty ocean, the home of all aquatic creatures. We cannot proceed further from here without devising some way of crossing the ocean. Let us think about it, and meanwhile let the army rest."

45. Hearing these words of Rama, Sugreeva arranged for the orderly stay of that army on that sea shore under the protection of their leaders. (46-48). They all felt depressed to see before them the formidable ocean full of waves of enormous size, dangerous on account of its huge aquatic creatures, fathomless in depth, and extensive like the sky. Filled with sorrow at the sight of this awe-inspiring abode of Varuna, they spoke among themselves, "How shall we cross this ocean and kill that evil fellow of a Ravana?" Distressed with such thought they all gathered round Rama.

The philosophy behind Rama's sorrow (49-54)

(49-53). Remembering Sita, Rama who had assumed a human form for a certain purpose, wailed piteously, thinking about Sita's condition. But it is the ignorant people, who do not understand the real nature of Rama, that attribute sorrow to him. In His true nature, Rama is the One without a second, Pure Consciousness, Eternal Being, and the Supreme Self. Not knowing this—that sorrow and such weaknesses like joy, fear, anger, greed, delusion, pride etc., which are the signs of ignorance, never affect Him who is Pure Consciousness—men attribute all these signs of ignorance to Him. Sorrow is a characteristic of one who thinks, 'I am the body'. How can it be present in one who has no identification with the body and is established in the experience that he is Pure Consciousness? Even in deep sleep, there is no sorrow or joy. In the absence of relative joy and sorrow, sleep is declared to be one of Pure Bliss (which is however covered by ignorance). Owing to the absence of Buddhi there is no sorrow in one who is established in Pure Consciousness. So sorrow and all these relative experiences are only affectations of the Buddhi and never of the true Self. 54. Rama is the Supreme Self, the all-inclusive and ever-shining Being, who existed even before creation. He is eternal and unbroken Bliss, unaffected by any change. People who are ignorant of this real nature of His, think of Him as possessed of the attributes of Maya and speak of Him as happy or afflicted.

EXPULSION OF VIBHEESHANA

(1-4). In Lanka, Ravana, who felt humiliated by all that Hanuman did there—what is incapable of performance even by Devas—now said with a touch of shame, in the assembly of all his ministers: "You have all seen what Hanuman has done.

He entered into this impregnable city of Lanka. He met Sita who is unapproachable to anyone. He destroyed many heroic Rakshasas including my son Aksha. Crossing the ocean, he set fire to the whole of Lanka and then overcoming you all, he has returned unhurt. 5. What are we to do hereafter? What is it by doing which things will turn in my favour? You, who are experts in diplomacy, are required to think about this."

6. Hearing Ravana's words, those Rakshasa ministers said to him, "O our lord and master! How is it that you entertain any fear about this Rama—you who are the conqueror of all the worlds! 7. Your son Indrajit bound up Indra himself and brought him before you. You have conquered Kubera and have taken away from him the aerial mansion Pushpaka, which now you are enjoying. 8. You have conquered Yama, and therefore, O Lord, there is no reason for you to fear the rod, the weapon of that Lord of death even. You have subdued Varuna by a mere Humkara. You have subdued also Rakshasas of every kind. 9. The great Asura Maya, out of fear, has given his own daughter to you, and he is even today your subordinate. Not to speak then of other Asuras. (10-11). Hanuman was able to behave so impudently here only because we did not take him seriously. We thought this insignificant fellow of a monkey could do nothing here and it was vain to show our heroism against him. Because of this way of thinking, we became a bit careless. What that Hanuman did was only deception. (12-13). If we had taken him seriously, do you imagine that he would ever have gone back alive? You order us, and we shall make this whole world devoid of the tribe of monkeys and of men. We shall all go together or go one by one according to your order."

14. Hearing these words of the time-serving ministers, Kumbhakarna said to Ravana, the lord of the Rakshasas, "What you have done at the start would itself have been the cause of your destruction. Fortunately for you, the great Rama did not see you when you went to abduct Sita. (15-18).

O Ravana! If Rama had seen you, you would not have come back alive. Rama is not a mere man. He is divine—Narayana, the Supreme Being. His famous consort Sita is the divine Lakshmi. Just as fish swallows a poisoned bait inviting its own destruction, so have you brought Sita here for the destruction of the whole tribe of Rakshasas. Now you are worrying, thinking of the consequences of your own action. But, O lord, even though what you have done is improper, I shall set things right. Do not worry."

19. On hearing Kumbhakarna's words Indrajit rose up and said, "O my Lord! Command me. I shall destroy this Rama and Lakshmana along with Sugreeva and all his monkeys, and come back to you."

Vibheeshana's Expulsion (20-33)

(20-21). Now came forward Vibheeshana, who was highly devotional, intelligent, pure-minded and entirely devoted to Rama. After saluting Ravana, he sat by his side and spoke words that astounded the arrogant Rakshasas from Kumbhakarna downwards and the love-lorn Ravana as well. He spoke deliberately as follows: 22. "O King! None of these Rakshasas—Kumbhakarna, Indrajit, Mahaparsva, Mahodara, Nikumbha, Kumbha, Adikaya etc.—can be a match to Rama in battle. 23. O King! You have been possessed, as it were, of a spirit which is Sita. You have to be exorcised of that spirit if you want to survive. The way for that is to take her, along with rich presents, to Rama and hand her over to him. You can then be a happy man. 24. If you do not want to see Rama's sharp arrows flying everywhere in Lanka and severing the heads of Rakshasas, then return Sita to him immediately.

25. If you do not want to see the mountain-like monkeys, strong as lions and capable of fighting with teeth and claws, attacking and sacking the whole of Lanka, then return Sita to Rama immediately. 26. Even if you are protected by Indra or Sankara, even if you get a place of refuge in the lap of the lord of the celestials or the god of death, or even if you take refuge in Patala, you will not be able to save your life from Rama."

27. These well-meant, noble and beneficial words were unacceptable to that evil-minded Ravana just as a medicine is to a man doomed to die. (28-29). Ravana, who was under the influence of destructive Time, now said to Vibheeshana, "You have been fattened by the food and the comforts of life bestowed by me. Though you are staying with me, you are inimical to me who have done only good to you. You are doing what is contrary to my interest. Though appearing to be a friend, you are a born enemy of mine. There is no doubt about it. 30. It does not befit me to associate with such an ungrateful and impudent person like you. It is well known that one's close relatives often look forward to one's destruction. 31. If any other Rakshasa had spoken such words as you have done, I would have executed him immediately. I do not, however, want to kill you. But begone, you scum of the Rakshasa tribe! Never again appear before me."

(32-33). On hearing these harsh words of Ravana, powerful Vibheeshana, with his mace in hand and accompanied by four ministers, leapt up into the sky from the assembly hall and in a mood of great anger, said to the ten-headed Ravana, stationing himself in the sky:

Vibheeshana's Sermon (34-46)

34. He said "May you not meet with destruction! You are my elder brother and therefore equal to my father himself. I have spoken only what is for your good and yet you are expelling me. (35-36). Kāla (Destructive Time) has been born in Dasaratha's house in the form of Rama and Kāli (feminine of Kāla) in the house of Janaka under the name of Sita. In order to relieve the earth of its burdens, they two have come here for your destruction. It is under their inducement that you refuse to hear my beneficial words of advice (37-39). Though Rama appears to be a man, he is really the Supreme Spirit who transcends Prakriti. He is Omnipresent, being within and without all beings. He is devoid of all impurity and ever the same. Under different names and forms, He appears as if divided, just as the one universal fire appears in different forms and sizes through different wooden pieces according to their shape and size. It is only the people who look at this phenomenon through the eye of ignorance that would consider the fire as different. (40-41). Just as a clear crystal appears as blue, yellow etc., in the proximity of those colours, so in the presence of the five sheaths (Kosas), He who is Pure Spirit appears like them. He is ever unbound and unlimited. But reflecting Himself in the Gunas of His own Maya, He appears in the four forms as Kala, Pradhana, Purusha and Avyakta. With Pradhana and Purusha as the cause, He, the unborn One manifests this whole universe. (42-43). The changeless Being that He is, He as Time effects the dissolution of the universe. Being prayed to by Brahma, He, the embodiment of Time, has assumed the form of Rama by His own mysterious power (Maya) and has come here for your destruction. How can you alter this? The will of the Lord comes always true. (44-45). Rama feel very happy and enjoy life in your palace." 46. So goaded by Ravana's words, Vibheeshana in a moment abandoned everything, his home and his possessions, and went to Rama fully satisfied to spend his time in his service.

Chapter 3

SELF-SURRENDER OF VIBHEESHANA

Vibheeshana seeking shelter at Rama's feet (1-14)

1. The high-souled Vibheeshana with his four ministers went to the place where Rama was, and stationed himself in the sky facing Rama. (2-4). He then said aloud, "O Lord! Lotus-eyed Rama! I am Vibheeshana, the brother of Ravana who has abducted your wife. Being expelled by my brother, I am seeking shelter under

you. O noble one! I spoke words that are beneficial to him, Ravana, who is bent on improper conduct. I advised him again and again to return Sita to you. Still, subject to the influence of Time, he would not listen to me. (5-6). On the other hand, the heinous Rakshasa approached, sword in hand, to kill me. So with my four ministers, I have left the place and, seeking liberation from Samsara, I take shelter under you without any loss of time." Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Sugreeva said: (7-9). "O Rama! He must be a notorious Rakshasa, an expert in magical tricks. Besides he is the brother of Ravana, strong in body and accompanied by ministers bearing arms. When he gets an opportunity, he will kill us. Therefore, O Lord, order me to have him executed by monkey guards. This is the course that suggests itself to my mind. Now you order what you think is right." On hearing Sugreeva's words, Rama smiled and said: 10. "O monkey leader! At my will, I create the whole universe along with Indra and other Devas in half a moment and destroy them also in a trice. 11. Thus, being the Lord of all, I am giving him shelter from all fear. Bring that Rakshasa soon before Me. It is My vow to give shelter to whomsoever among the creatures that come to Me saying even once, 'I am thine' " 12. Thereupon Sugreeva, who was delighted to hear Rama's words, brought Vibheeshana and presented him to Rama. (13-14). Vibheeshana now made a full prostration to Rama. In a voice choked with intense devotion and with palms joined in salutation, he began to chant a hymn in praise of Rama who was peaceful and joyous in facial expression, who was large-eyed and blue in complexion, who was equipped with bow and arrow, and who was accompanied by Lakshmana.

Vibheeshana's Hymn (15-30)

Vibheeshana now said: (15-20). "Salutation to Thee great leader—to Thee the gladdener of Sita's heart, to Thee equipped with the terrible bow, to Thee lover of devotees, to Thee Infinite Being, to Thee of unlimited brilliance, to Thee the friend of Sugreeva, to Thee the Lord of Raghu's clan, to Thee the cause of the creation, sustentation and dissolution of the universe, to Thee the great Being who is the teacher of all the worlds, to Thee the primeval householder (being the Lord of Prakriti from the beginning of time), to Thee who preceded all the worlds! Thou art the cause of the worlds, Thou sustinest it and into Thee it dissolves. Thy will is unobstructed by anything. Thou alone existest within and without all beings as the Pervader. and the Pervaded. Thou manifestest in the form of the universe. Carried away by the power of Thy Maya, Jivas steeped in ignorance, devoid of discriminative power and subject to merits and demerits, revolve in the Samsara consisting of births and deaths. 21. Until one knows Thee with a purified mind which does not go after anything else other than Thee, the Jiva perceives this universe as real, just as silver is seen in the mother of pearl by one under illusory perception. 22. Not knowing Thee, man, O Lord, remains ever attached to son, wife and relatives, and takes delight in all these objects of the senses, which will ultimately bring him sorrow. (23-30). Thou art verily Indra, Agni, Yama, Niruti, Varuna, Vayu, Kubera, Rudra and the Supreme Purusha. Thou art subtler than the subtlest atom, and bigger than the grossest of objects. The creator and Protector of the worlds, Thou art without beginning, middle or end, Thou art ever full. Thou art devoid of loss and destruction, devoid of hands and feet, devoid of eyes and ears. Thou movest fast without legs, Thou graspest everything without hands, Thou seest everything without eyes, and Thou hearest everything without ears. Thou art beyond the limitation of the five Kosas (sheaths of the Jiva), Thou art without the limitation of the Gunas, requiring no support other than Thyself.

Thou art the unmodified, the changeless and formless Being. There is no other being to lord over Thee. Thou art devoid of the six transformations which all objects undergo. Without a beginning and transcending Prakriti, Thou, out of Thy own mysterious power, hast appeared as a man. Knowing Thee, who art unlimited by the Gunas, devotees attain liberation through the ladder of genuine devotion to Thee, leading to the summit of illuminating knowledge. I am a devotee seeking this attainment. Salutation to Thee, the enemy of Ravana and the most merciful one. Lift me out of the ocean of Samsara."

Vibheeshana's Installation (31-47)

31. Pleased with Vibheeshana, Rama, the lover of devotees, said, "May you attain what is auspicious. Seek whatever boon you want. I am the bestower of boons on devotees." Vibheeshana replied: 32. "I am blessed by Thy sight, and have attained the object of my seeking and the ultimate end of my life. I am liberated even by the sight of Thee. 33. I deem in the whole world there is none so fortunate and blessed as I am, because I have been able to see Thy holy form. 34. For the breaking of my bondage of Karma, bestow on me the knowledge of Thyself characterised by devotion, and the capacity of meditation on Thee which leads one to this attainment. 35. I care not to seek from Thee any worldly happiness. I seek only that form of devotion that gives one continuing attachment for Thy holy feet."

36. Rama replied, "So be it!" And he continued, much pleased, "O noble one! Listen to a secret that is literally true

37. Along with Sita, I ever dwell in the hearts of Yogis who are devoted to Me, who are without worldly longings and whose minds are ever settled in peace. 38. Therefore, you, who are peaceful and ever devoid of all sins and impurities, will, through meditation on Me, be rescued from this terrible ocean of Samsara. 39. Whoever studies this hymn of yours on Me, writes it or hears it, will obtain My favour and will attain to Sarupya (salvation by obtaining His form)." 40. Then turning to Lakshmana, Rama, to whose heart a devotee is very dear, continued, "Let him experience the fruit of association with Me even now.

(41-44). "I am going to instal him as the king of Lanka even now. Bring water from the ocean for the ceremonial bath connected with the installation. So long as the moon and the sun shine, so long as the earth remains as it is, so long as My story prevails in this world, he shall rule over the land." With these words, he had the required water brought by Lakshmana. Installing Vibheeshana as the king of Lanka, Rama, the consort of Ramā, had the ceremonial bath performed by the ministers and by Lakshmana. All the monkeys acclaimed it in great joy, and Sugreeva, embracing Vibheeshana, said: (45-46). "O Vibheeshana! All of us are servants of Rama, the Supreme Being. Among them, you have the distinction that, seeing the intensity of your devotion, Rama accepted you directly. Now you can help us all in the destruction of Ravana." 47. Vibheeshana said, "Whatever service I can do in that direction according to my capacity and with the spirit of true devotion, I shall do with all sincerity."

by Ravana as a spy, addressed Sugreeva standing aloft in the sky as follows: (49-51). He said, "Ravana, the king of the Rakshasas, tells you, who are like a brother to him, 'You, who are born in an illustrious line and are the king of all the monkeys, are like a brother to me. I have done no harm to you. That I have abducted the wife of the prince of Ayodhya is of no consequence to you. You return with your monkey army to Kishkindha. Lanka cannot be approached even by the celestials, much less by weak men and monkeys.'" 52. At once the monkeys on hearing these words of the Rakshasa, jumped up, caught hold of him, and were about to strike him with their hard fists. 53. The Rakshasa Suka on being thus fisted by the monkeys, said to Rama, "O great King! A messenger should not be killed. Please order the monkeys not to do so." 54. Hearing this pitiable request of Suka, Rama ordered the monkeys not to attack him. 55. Now Suka again ascended to the sky and addressed Sugreeva saying, "O King! I am now about to depart. What shall I tell the Rakshasa King Ravana?"

56. Sugreeva now gave out the following message in reply: "O evil fellow of a Rakshasa! Just as my brother Vali was killed, you along with your sons and armies will somehow be destroyed. 57. Stealing the wife of Sri Rama, how can you escape?" Afterwards, on the orders of Rama, Sugreeva had Suka imprisoned. (58-59). Even before this incident, a messenger of Ravana named Sardula had observed the army of the monkeys and made a realistic report of the state of affairs to Ravana. It made Ravana think deeply and stay in his palace, giving out deep sighs out of anxiety.

Subdual of the Lord of the Ocean (60-86)

(60-63). Now looking at the sea, Rama with eyes reddened by anger, said to Lakshmana, "O Lakshmana! Look at this evil-minded Lord of the ocean. He has not come to meet me who has camped by the side of his realm. He might be thinking, 'What can these human beings do with the help of monkeys?' O hero! I shall now dry up the ocean. The monkeys will march fearlessly over the bed of the ocean." With eyes glowing with anger, Rama strung his bow and took an arrow out of its quiver, and fixed it on the bow-string. It was glowing like the fire of cosmic destruction. Pulling the bow-string, he said as follows:

64. "Let all beings witness the power of Rama's arrow. I shall now dry up the ocean, the meeting ground of all the rivers."

(65-66). When Rama uttered these words,

the world with its mountains and forests and the sky above trembled. The quarters were covered by darkness. The sea out of fear became turbulent and dry to the extent of a Yojana from the shore. Terror overtook all the aquatic creatures like whales, crocodiles and fish.

(67-68). Meanwhile, the Lord of the ocean appeared in a divine form, bedecked with various ornaments and spreading his lustre all around. Holding in his hand various kinds of precious jewels deposited within him, he made a presentation of them at Rama's feet. (69-70) He made prostrations to Rama, whose eyes were red with anger, and said, "O Rama, the Lord and protector of the three worlds! Save me. Thou, who art the creator of the whole world, made me dull in spirit. How can I shed that characteristic that Thou Thyself hast given? 71. The five gross elements have been created by Thee with the characteristic of dullness (Tamas). None can transgress Thy ordinance. 72. Out of Tamasa Ahamkara (the I-sense of dullness) all the elements have come out. That dullness, characteristic of their cause, persists in them all by nature. (73-74). When Thou, O Lord, who art formless and devoid of the Gunas of Prakriti assumest, out of a spirit of play, Thy Maya constituted of Gunas, They call Thee the Virat Purusha. Out of the Virat Purusha characterised by Gunas, the divine sages like Sanaka were born of the constituent Sattva element; the Lords of creation like Manu and others, of the Rajasa element; and Rudra, the Lord of elementals, of the Guna called Tamas. 75. How can I, a creature with dull intelligence and stupid by nature, understand Thee who transcendest the Gunas, when Thou coverest Thyself with Thy Maya and sportest as a human being? (76-77). O Lord! Punishment alone can bring stupid beings into the right path, just as a stick is required to keep animals on the right track. O lover of devotees! I seek shelter under Thee who art fit for all human beings to take shelter in. O Rama! Give me Thy protection. I grant Thee the way to Lanka."

78. Sri Rama thereupon said to him, "This arrow of mine can never go in vain. Show me the target to which it should be directed. Quickly show that target; for this missile must necessarily strike one."

79. The Lord of the great ocean, on hearing these words of Rama, and seeing the mighty arrow in his hand, said to him as follows: (80-82). "In the northern regions, there is a place called Drumakulya where many sinful creatures are living. They give me trouble day and night. Let the arrow be directed towards them." Rama's arrow was now released, and it destroyed that whole tribe of Abhiras and came back to his quiver as before. Now in all humility, the Lord of the ocean said to Rama: (83-84) "There is among these monkey followers of Thine, one named Nala who is an offspring of Viswakarma, the heavenly architect. Let him build a bund across the ocean. By virtue of the boon given to him by Brahma, he will be capable of doing this. Let all the worlds sing Thy praise on account of this achievement." Then after making prostrations to Rama, the Spirit of the ocean disappeared.

85. Now Rama along with Sugreeva and Lakshmana ordered Nala and the other monkeys to start the construction of the bund. 86. Rejoiced at this command, Nala with the help of mountain-sized monkey leaders built a bund, bridging the hundred Yojanas of the sea with huge rocks and trees.

MARCH TO LANKA

Installation of Rameswara and building of Setu (1-7)

1. On starting the construction of the bund (Setu), Rama, for the successful completion of the work as also for the good of the world, established there the icon of Siva, known as Rameswara, and performing worship to that Siva icon, said:

2. "Whoever sees and makes prostrations to this bund under construction and this icon of Siva called Rameswara, will by my blessings be free from all sins including the killing of holy men. (3-4). After taking bath at the site of this bund (Setu) and worshipping Rameswara, a man should, without any distraction in mind, go to Varanasi. He should get the water of Ganga in a pot from Varanasi, bathe Rameswara Lingam with it, and deposit the pot and other things in the sea. Such a person will attain to Brahman."

(5-7). Nala, in five days completed the construction of the bund extending up to Lanka.. On the first day, the great monkey constructed fourteen Yojanas of the bund; on the second day twenty; on the third day twenty one; on the fourth day twenty two more; and on the fifth day twenty three.

The monkey army marches to Lanka (8-14)

8. The monkeys quickly marched along that hundred Yojanas of the bund, and in their countless numbers established themselves on the mountain called Suvela. 9. Rama and Lakshmana, who were anxious to have a view of Lanka, ascended to the top of the mountain on the shoulders of Hanuman and Angada. (10-14). Standing on that vantage ground of the mountain, Rama had a view of that extensive city. It was decorated with countless colourful flags. Numerous mansions were rising high into the sky, and gate towers surrounded by walls of gold could be seen everywhere. It was protected by moats and weapons called Sataghni (rockets that could kill a hundred enemies at a time). In that city, Rama saw Ravana seated on the top of a very big mansion. Beside him were his various competent ministers. He was resplendent with the crowns on his ten heads. In appearance, he resembled the peak of a blue mountain, and in splendour he rivalled a massive cloud of the rainy season. Numerous ceremonial white umbrellas with bejewelled handles were held over him. Now after taking a view of Lanka, Rama ordered the Rakshasa, Suka, who was held in custody by the monkeys, to be released. Thus released after being severely beaten by the monkeys, Suka went to the presence of Ravana, who asked him smiling. "O Suka! Have you been beaten by the enemies?"

Suka's Report to Ravana (15-37)

15. Hearing Ravana's words, Suka said, "At your command, I went to the northern shore of the ocean and communicated your commandment.
16. The monkeys thereupon leapt into the sky, caught hold of me and started punching me with their fists and tearing me with their teeth and claws.
17. I thereupon cried to Rama for protection, and Rama ordered me to be released. Thus released by the monkeys, I have come to you terribly frightened at the sight of that monkey army.
18. There can be no peaceful settlement between the army of the Rakshasas and that of the monkeys; just as between Asuras and Devas. War seems to be inevitable.
19. O Lord! The monkey army has advanced up to your outer fortifications. Therefore quickly decide upon one or the other of these courses—either give away Sita to Rama or be ready to fight with him.

(20-21). "Rama said to me, 'You communicate to Ravana these words of mine: 'That army and allies, relying on whom you took away Sita—let them now come forward. From tomorrow onwards, my arrows will start destroying the city of Lanka with all its walls and towers and Rakshasa forces. 22. I will send against you a fierce army for attack. O Ravana! Know this for certain.' Rama stopped his speech with this. (23-24). Even if all the monkeys remain waiting without taking part in the attack, the four great personalities, Rama, Lakshmana, Sugreeva and Vibheeshana, will be sufficient to turn your Lanka topsy-turvy and reduce it to ashes.

25. From what I saw of his form, strength and weapons, I feel that Rama by himself, even without the help of the other three, will be competent to destroy you and everything here.

26. "Besides, I see the huge army of the monkeys filling the whole country. The mountain-sized monkeys are roaring. It is impossible to enumerate the names of all of them, but I shall mention a few according to their importance. 27. There stands facing Lanka Sugreeva's commander-in-chief Neela, the off-spring of Agni. Surrounded by a hundred thousand army leaders, he stands there challenging by his terrific war cries. 28. Next there is Angada, the son of Vali and heir-apparent of the monkey empire, huge like a mountain peak and in complexion resembling the inside of a lotus flower. He stands exhibiting his wrath by striking the earth with his tail again and again. 29. Next there is the famous Hanuman, so dear to Rama's heart, by whom Sita was discovered, and who killed your son Aksha. 30. That monkey whom you see coming near Sugreva and going back again, and whose complexion is silvery, is Sveta of great intelligence and resource. 31. That mighty monkey, lion-like in prowess, who is seen casting his eyes at Lanka is named Rambha. He is capable of destroying the whole of this Lanka. 32. O King! The other monkey leader who is casting glances at Lanka, as if he is going to reduce it to ashes, and who is the leader of a crore of monkeys, is Sarabha. 33. There are others, the powerful monkey Panasa, and next to him Mainda and Dvivida. There is also the powerful Nala, the off-spring of Viswakarma, who was responsible for building this bund. 34. Who on earth can possibly describe these various monkeys and make an estimate of their numbers? They are all heroic, powerful and war-like by nature. 35. Everyone of these monkey leaders is by himself capable of destroying the whole of Lanka. I shall tell you the number of forces under each of them. (36-37). The armies under the above mentioned ministers of Sugreeva are twenty-one thousand crores, together with another hundred thousand billion and yet another ten thousand million. As for the numbers of troops under the others, I am not able to make any estimate.

Suka's Sermon (38-54)

38. "Rama is not a mere man. He is that Original Being Narayana, the Supreme Spirit, and Sita is His power of knowledge, the cause of the worlds. (39-40). This whole universe of moving and stationary beings originated from Them and so They are the Father and the Mother of the whole universe. Pray, how can you survive courting their enmity? She whom you have abducted unknowingly—Sita—is the Mother of the universe. (41-43). O King! This body of yours constituted of five elements and derived from the twenty-four categories endures only for a short time. Constituted of flesh, bones, excreta and other such stuff, it is foul-smelling. It is the abode of the 'I-sense' and is by nature insentient. Your real nature is different from that of this body. Then why do you show attachment for the body for the sake of which you have done heinous sins like killing holy men? This body of yours, which you think is the enjoyer of so many things, is bound to perish. (44-46). It is merit and demerit, the causes of enjoyment and suffering, that beget a body for the Jiva. It is by association with the body that the Atman is constantly subjected to happiness and misery. So long as subjected to identification with the body, the Atman thinks 'I am the body', 'I am the actor', 'I do this and that', so long the Atman finds himself subject to birth and death. So, O high-souled one, abandon identification with the body. The Atman in itself is without any stain and is pure, unmoving, indestructible and of the nature of Pure Consciousness. 47. Not knowing one's real nature, one feels bound and deluded. Therefore, knowing yourself to be the pure Atman, be constantly established in that thought. 48. Be non-attached towards all worldly objects like children, wife and home. Enjoyments of such objects can be had even in the hell-like bodies of dogs and pigs. (49-53). After obtaining a human body with discriminative powers, especially that of a twice-born one, and after being born in the region of Bharata, the land of spirituality—which wise man would feel satisfied to be entrenched in body-consciousness and enjoyments derived from it? Therefore, you being born as a twice-born—as a grandson of the sage Pulastya—why are you ever in pursuit of bodily enjoyments like the deluded ignorant? At least hereafter abandon all attachments and adore Rama, the Supreme Being, with pure devotion. Surrendering Sita to Rama and seeking shelter at his feet, you will be free from all the sins and will attain to the realm of Vishnu. If you do not do this, you will degenerate into lower and lower embodiments and be caught in the cycle of repeated births and deaths, and will be devoid of any scope for regeneration. Accept my advice. I am offering it in your best interest. 54. Seek association with holy men, and take shelter in Sri Rama who is the refuge of all beings, who destroys the sins of all, who is luminous like the gem Marakata, who is accompanied by Sita, who is equipped with bow and arrow, and who is served by Sugreeva, Lakshmana and Vibheeshana."

THE FIRST ASSAULT BY MONKEY FORCES

Antecedents of Suka (1-24)

1. Hearing these noble words of Suka capable of destroying ignorance, Ravana, highly incensed and with eyes red because of that, looked at Suka as if he were going to burn him up and said: 2. "You fellow of a servant! You evil-minded fool! How dare you talk to me as if you were my teacher! I am the ruler of all the three worlds, and who are you, a mere servant, to advise me? Are you not ashamed of yourself? 3. I should have killed you here and now. But remembering your past services, I forbear from doing so. 4. O fool! Begone from here! I cannot bear this kind of speech." Considering this order a great blessing, Suka with his body trembling went back to his home to lead a retired life.

5. Suka in his previous life was a pious Brahmana, a knower of Brahman. As a Vanaprastha (hermit), he was staying in the forest performing his religious duties. 6. For the advancement of the Dévas and the destruction of their enemies, the Asuras, Suka was continuously performing many sacrifices. (7-8). Knowing that Suka was in favour of the Devas, the Rakshasas contracted enmity towards him. Among them a famous Rakshasa named Vajradamshtra was waiting for an opportunity to harm Suka. At that time, the sage Agastya happened to go to the hermitage of Suka. (9-11). After duly honouring and worshipping him, Suka invited him for his mid-day meal. Agastya thereupon went to take his bath as a preliminary to taking food. The Rakshasa Vajradamshtra found that this was the opportune moment for him to achieve his purpose. Assuming the form of Agastya, he appeared before Suka as if he were Agastya come back to communicate something. In the disguise of Agastya, he said to Suka, "O holy one, if you think of feeding me, you must also provide some meat. It is now long since I have eaten mutton." Suka agreed to this and made elaborate arrangements for a feast, with mutton included in the menu. (12-16). When the real sage Agastya returned and sat for his meal, the Rakshasa, assuming the form of Suka's handsome wife, appeared on the spot after having rendered the real wife of Suka unconscious by his magical power. He came with plenty of human flesh, dressed and cooked as many dishes, and after serving it to the sage Agastya, disappeared from the place immediately. Agastya was now provoked to great anger to see the prohibited human flesh served to him and he said to Suka, "O evil one! You have served me with human flesh which should not be eaten. So I curse you to become a Rakshasa yourself, subsisting on human flesh." Cursed in this way, Suka said to Agastya in great fear, "O sage! It was only just now that you asked me to prepare an elaborate meal with meat. I have done accordingly. Then why is it that you have cursed me?" 17. Hearing Suka's words, Agastya reflected for a moment and came to understand the mischief done by the Rakshasa. He thereupon calmed down and said to Suka: 18. "O Sage! All this is the mischief done by a Rakshasa inimical to you. Without any knowledge of it, I have pronounced this curse. (19-22). Still my words cannot go in vain. You will be turned into a Rakshasa. In the body of a Rakshasa, you stay for sometime as a servant of Ravana. When along with the army of monkeys Rama comes to Lanka for the destruction of Ravana, then, being sent as a spy by Ravana, you will have occasion to see Rama. You will then be freed from the effect of the curse. Then after imparting the knowledge of spiritual Truth to Ravana, you will get liberation and attain to the Supreme Status." (23-24). When Agastya had finished speaking, Suka was immediately transformed into a Rakshasa and he went to take service under Ravana. Now as a spy, he happened to see Rama in the company of Lakshmana, and afterwards imparted the knowledge of the Truth to Ravana. Immediately after that, he regained his place as a Brahmana living in the community of Vanaprasthas.

Malyavan's Sermon (25-40).

(25-26). Now came Malyavan, the maternal grandfather of Ravana, advanced in years and versed in law. He came with a peaceful mind to give a piece of advice to the heroic Ravana. Malyavan said to Ravana, "O King! Listen to my words and then do as you please. (27-29). Ever since

Sita, the wife of Rama, was brought to this city, there have begun to appear, O Ravana, various frightening omens indicating our imminent destruction. What these are, I shall tell you. With startling thunderclaps, terrifying masses of clouds are seen around Lanka, showering rains of hot blood everywhere. The images in temples moan, perspire, and tremble. (30-33). Kali, standing before us, is screaming with laughter, revealing her white teeth. Cows are giving birth to donkeys. Mongoose and rats, joining together as friends, are attacking cats, and snakes are putting up a fight against eagles. The terrific figure of Kala, the destroyer, clean-shaven, fat in body and jet black in colour, is appearing in the morning and the evening in the homes of Rakshasas. These and several other omens are seen everywhere. Therefore, O Ravana, perform the rites of propitiation for saving your tribe from destruction. The way to do this is to restore Sita quickly to Rama along with rich presents. (34-36). Know that Rama is Narayana. Therefore abandon your enmity towards him and surrender yourself at His feet, which are like a boat, by entrusting themselves to which the knowing ones, with minds purified by devotion, cross this ocean of Samsara. Rama is not a mere man. He resides in the hearts of all beings. Adore Him with devotion. Even though you are given to evil ways, you will be purified by devotion. O great King! Listen to my words for the good of our tribe."

37. Ravana, who was already under the influence of destructive Time, could not brook these words of advice of Malyavan given in his best interest. 38. He therefore burst out, "Rama—a mere man steeped in sorrow, a dependant of monkeys, exiled from his kingdom by his father, and the friend of ascetics! Who will consider such a person as competent to do anything? 39. You must have come to me prompted by Rama to speak so eloquently on his behalf. Get away from my presence. You are aged, and also a relative of mine. So I forgive you for what you have spoken. 40. I cannot stand such words anymore." With these words, Ravana departed from there with all his ministers.

41. Now sitting on the top of his palace, Ravana had a view of the monkey army surrounding his city, and he gave orders to all his Rakshasa forces to be in readiness for battle. (42-44). Meantime, Rama, seeing Ravana from a distance thus seated comfortably amidst his ministers, took his bow from the hands of Lakshmana, and with eyes red with anger, shot at Ravana a semi-circular arrow which in an instant cut-off the numerous white umbrellas held over

Ravana and the crowns on his ten heads. All were astonished to see this wonderful achievement. (45-46). Overcome by shame, that evil-minded Ravana immediately went inside his palace, and calling his ministers like Prahasta to his side, exhorted them to be ready to give battle to the monkey army immediately.

(47-48). To the accompaniment of various kinds of drums, bugles, and other instruments of martial music, and riding on various mounts like buffaloes, camels, mules, lions and tigers, and equipped with a variety of weapons like swords, lances, bows, darts, pestles, spiked bludgeons, and javelin, the Rakshasa armies took their position at all the portals leading to the city.

(49-50). At the order of Rama, the monkeys were already prepared for attack, having equipped themselves with huge boulders, rocky-peaks of mountains and whole trees. Marking the position of Ravana's forces in different places, they mounted an attack on Lanka to the great satisfaction of Rama. (51-54). Those monkey leaders, each with thousand to a crore of followers under them, attacked Lanka with trees and huge stones. Giving out shouts of victory in the names of Rama, Lakshmana and Sugreeva, and protected by Rama, they jumped up and down in various parts of the city and gave battle to the Rakshasas. (55-56). The powerful army leaders like Hanuman, Angada, Kumuda, Neela, Nala, Sarabha, Mainda,

Dvividha, Jambavan, Dadhivaktra, Kesari, Tara etc., leapt over the gate towers of Lanka and obstructed the exit passages with trees and rocks. (57-58). The monkeys with very speedy movements killed with their nails and teeth many Rakshasas of huge size. Roused to great anger the Rakshasas came out of the portals of the fortress and killed many monkeys also with catapults, swords, spears, and hatchets. (59-60). The victorious monkeys killed many Rakshasas and the battlefield was made miry with the blood and flesh of the forces destroyed, thus presenting a sight of awe-inspiring bloodshed. (61-64). Reverberating the quarters with their battle cries, the Rakshasas fought, mounted on horses, elephants and chariots of golden hue. Fighting with an eye on victory, the Rakshasas and the monkeys clashed with great violence, causing mutual destruction. But blessed by the glance of Rama, the monkeys who were the off-spring of Devas, fought with great enthusiasm and joy like those who had drunk nectar. But the Rakshasas had their prowess and good fortune eclipsed by the fact of their being under the protection of Ravana accursed by the monstrous sin of having touched the holy body of Sita. They therefore suffered terrible destruction, a fourth of their forces being annihilated.

Meghanada's devastating attack (65-70)

(65-67). Seeing the Rakshasa army being thus destroyed, the evil-minded Asura named Meghanada came for its protection. He was once blessed with boons by Brahma and was a master in the use of all missiles. He was also noted for the various victories he had won. Now remaining unseen in the sky, he attacked the monkey forces with Brahma missile and various other kinds of weapons. Everyone was astonished at this feat of his. (68-69). Rama, who was a master of archery, for a time remained silent and passive in order to show respect to the Brahma missile. Then seeing the troops of the monkey army falling down, he flew into a fiery rage and said to Lakshmana, "O Lakshmana! Bring my bow. I shall reduce this Asura to ashes with Brahma missile. You witness my prowess." 70. But overhearing Rama's words, Meghanada, who was an adept in magic, took care to go back invisible to the city immediately.

(71-73). Rama was very much afflicted to see a very large number of monkey troops fallen down by Meghanada's attack. So he said to Hanuman, "Go quickly to the Milk Ocean where there is a mountain called Drona, on which many medicinal herbs grow. Go and bring it quickly in order to rejuvenate these monkeys. This will bring you eternal fame." Hanuman accepted the order implicitly and went away immediately on that mission 74. The mountain was brought and all the monkeys were revived with its help. Hanuman took back the mountain to replace it and came back quickly.

The Rout of the Rakshasas (75-86)

75. Now terrific sounds again arose from the ranks of the monkeys as before to the great astonishment of Ravana. Wondering at it, Ravana said: (76-78). "Rama, my great enemy deputed by the Devas, is standing there knocking at our gates. In order to kill him in battle soon, let all my army commanders, ministers, relatives and other brave persons who want to serve my interests go forward for battle at my order. Whoever out of fear shall not thus go in violation of my order, will be executed. (79-80). Trembling with fear at this order of Ravana, all the highly skilled Rakshasa warriors like Atikaya, Prahasta, Mahanada, Mohodara Devasatru,Nikumbha,Devantaka,Narantaka etc., went out for battle with the monkeys. (81-82). These and other numerous courageous warriors who were proud of their strength attacked the vast monkey forces with various kinds of weapons like Bhusundi, Bhindipala,arrows, swords, battleaxes and a variety of missiles. 83. And the monkeys in their turn counter-attacked and killed the Rakshasas with trees, mountain-cliffs and with their teeth and claws. 84. Consequently that Rakshasa army was largely destroyed, some by Rama and others by Sugreeva, Hanuman, Angada, the high-souled Lakshmana and various monkey leaders. 85. By the infusion of Rama's prowess, the strength of the monkeys was augmented. How can others not blessed in this way by Rama's power gain strength? 86. Rama is God of all and the creator who has become this All. He is ever established in His inherent Bliss-Consciousness. Still assuming the form of a man by His own Maya and consequently following human ways, he engages Himself in war and other activities as a sport.

RAVANA SEEKS KALANEMI'S HELP

(1-34)

(1-2). Ravana was overcome both by grief and anger to know of the destruction of that great army consisting of Atikaya and others. So stationing Indrajit for the protection of Lanka, Ravana himself sallied forth with a big army to give battle to Rama. 3. Seating himself in a chariot equipped with all kinds of missiles and weapons, the mighty Ravana went forth to challenge Rama himself directly. 4. While thus charging towards Rama, Ravana destroyed numerous monkeys with his arrows, sharp and penetrating like poison. Many a monkey leader including Sugreeva fell down on the battle field under this attack. 5. When he saw there the powerful Vibheeshana equipped with a mace, Ravana threw at him a powerful weapon called Sakti (dart or javelin) given to him by Maya. (6-7). Noticing that the weapon was directed towards Vibheeshana for his destruction, mighty Lakshmana thought, "Rama has given shelter to this Asura. It is not befitting that he is killed." With this resolution, he took his mighty bow and stood in front of Vibheeshana like an immovable mountain for the latter's protection. (8-9) That weapon Sakti released by Ravana was irresistible and must necessarily strike its target. So it struck at Lakshmana, but what can the Sakti (Power) of a weapon do against him, Lakshmana, the incarnation of Adisesha who is the support of all the Saktis (the powers) of Maya? (10-12). Still in compliance with his present human status, he fell unconscious on the ground. Ravana now approached the fallen Lakshmana and tried to lift him up with his hands, but to his great astonishment he could not do so. For how can this little fellow of a Rakshasa lift up him who was none but the All-formed Cosmic Being (the Virat Purusha) who supports the worlds—an aspect of Mahavishnu the Supreme Lord?

(13-14). On seeing Ravana attempting to lift up Lakshmana, Hanuman in great anger hit the former on his chest with his powerful fist. Being thus hit, Ravana fell down on his knees with blood profusely flowing through his mouth, nose and ears. He became dizzy and sat in his chariot. 15. Next Hanuman lifted up the unconscious Lakshmana who had fallen down by the impact of Ravana's Sakti, and took him to the presence of Rama. 16. Though himself the supreme Master of all masters, Rama felt obliged and grateful to Hanuman on seeing his devotion and faithfulness. (17-19). That weapon Sakti, finding Lakshmana to be a part of Narayana Himself and impossible therefore to be killed, went back to Ravana's chariot. Ravana too was little by little restored to consciousness. Then, bow in hand, he rushed towards Rama. Moved by great anger at the sight of Ravana coming for attack seated in his chariot, Rama the Lord of the worlds, faced him, ascending on the shoulders of the powerful Hanuman.

20. Twanging his bow strings and producing terrific sounds like that of an explosive, Rama said to the Rakshasa king in a deep and grave voice: 21. "O despicable fellow of a Rakshasa! Remain before me for a while. Having done such a serious offence against one who looks upon all beings with an equal eye, how can you now escape? 22. That arrow by which your Rakshasa followers at Janasthana were destroyed, with that very arrow you are now going to be killed. Stand in my presence for a while."

23. On hearing these words of Rama, Ravana sent sharp arrows at Hanuman, on whom Rama was mounted. 24. Though thus struck with those sharp arrows, Hanuman's strength only increased on account of the infusion of Rama's prowess into him. So, that great monkey leader now gave out terrific lion-roars. 25. Now Rama seeing Hanuman thus wounded, assumed a mood of anger like Rudra, the destroyer Himself. 26. In an instant he destroyed with powerful arrows, Ravana's chariot with its horses, standard, the charioteer, umbrella and his assemblage of weapons. 27. Next

Rama, the noblest of Raghu's line, wounded Ravana with his arrows, sharp like the thunderbolt weapon even as Indra smashes mountains. (28-30). Wounded in this way by Rama's arrows, the powerful Ravana trembled and swooned and his bow fell down from his hand. When he saw Ravana in this plight, Rama cut off the crowns on his heads with his semi-circular arrow and said to him, "As you are terribly distressed by the wounds caused by my arrows, I let you go now. Go to Lanka and take rest. Tomorrow you shall have more experience of my prowess." 31. With his body torn by Rama's arrows, Ravana felt humbled very much and he entered Lanka in great grief and shame.

32. Now Rama again looked at Lakshmana, who was still lying unconscious, and in keeping with his human appearance, he indulged in mourning.

(33-34). Then he said to Hanuman. "Dear one! As before, go and get those great herbal remedies once more in order to revive Lakshmana and the monkeys." Ordered in this way by Rama, Hanuman proceeded with the speed of wind, crossing the ocean.

Kalanemi Episode (35-46)

35. Meanwhile, Ravana's spies went and reported to him, "O Lord! For the revival of Lakshmana, Hanuman has been sent by Rama to get herbal remedies from the shores of the milk ocean." 36. These words of the spy set Ravana thinking. At night, he went alone to the house of Kalanemi. 37. Kalanemi was taken aback with fear and wonder to see Ravana at his house. After receiving him with Arghya and Padya, he stood before Ravana in all humility.

(38-40). Kalanemi said, "O Lord! What shall I do for you? What is it that has brought you to me?" Ravana, who was distressed with great sorrow, said as follows to Kalanemi: "Bad times have overtaken me too, and misfortunes are befalling me one after another. Now in order to revive the powerful Lakshmana who has been hit by my weapon Sakti, Hanuman has gone to fetch herbal remedies. You do what you can to obstruct him in his course.

41. "Adopting the form of an ascetic, you deceive that great monkey and delay him in his mission. Doing this much, you return home." 42. Hearing Ravana's words, Kalanemi said to him, "O my master Ravana! Hear my words and take them in their true spirit. (43-46). I shall certainly do what is pleasing to you but know for certain that I shall not be able to return alive from this mission. What happened in the forest earlier to Mareecha who went in the guise of a deer, the same is going to happen to me also. O ten-headed one! After all your relatives are dead, after seeing the whole of the Rakhsasa tribe destroyed, of what use is life for you, of what use is kingdom, of what use is even Sita? What will you achieve even with your body which will be as good as a corpse? Therefore give away Sita to Rama and the kingdom to Vibheeshana, and you, O powerful one, take to the life of an ascetic in the forest.

(47-51). "Taking your bath early in the morning in clean water, perform the rites like Sandhya and others, resort to solitude, and sitting in a convenient posture and abandoning all attachment to all persons and external objects, slowly but steadily withdraw your mind away from them towards the inner Self, and think constantly of the Atman who is distinct from Prakriti (the objective universe). O great one! All this universe of moving and unmoving beings, objects like body, intellect and the senses, the whole universe from Brahma down to a blade of grass—in fact all that can be seen and heard—are manifestations of Prakriti, also known as Maya. It is the cause of this tree of the Universe—of its creation, preservation and dissolution. Its three aspects of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas constantly generate beings akin to them. 52. Desire, anger and other passions are its sons, and cruelty, avarice and other tendencies, its daughters. It continuously deludes the Atman, who is luminous and all-pervading. 53. It continues to sport for ever by superimposing on the Atman, who is really the Lord, the experiences that are born of its own Gunas (constituents), namely, the sense of agency and enjoyership. 54. Though by nature ever pure, the Atman, by association with Prakriti, is deluded by its Guna (constituents), and forgetting His own real nature, becomes outward-going. 55. Instructed by a teacher who has realised himself as Pure Consciousness and thereby knowing that the Atman is different from Prakriti, the Jiva turns his outlook from the external to the internal and realises his own ever pure spiritual nature. (56-57). Then the Jiva, who is really free even in the embodied state, recognises his freedom from the clutches of the Gunas. You, too, by controlling your senses and ever reflecting on the Atman as distinct from Prakriti, can become liberated. If you cannot reflect in this way, you practise devotion for the Supreme Being as endowed with attributes.

(58-61). "Meditate on the shining form of Rama, the resident of the hearts of all, as served by Lakshmana holding the couple of bows. Meditate on Him as seated in the lotus of your heart in the heroic pose on a seat made of pure gold, studded with costly gems and covered with a soft-cushion. Meditate on Him seated beside Sita, as endowed with large eyes, as dressed with clothes shining like lightning, as adorned with a crown, necklaces, armlets, Kaustubha gem, anklets, wristlets and floral wreath. Meditating thus with supreme devotion, you can undoubtedly gain liberation. 62. Hear always accounts about Him in the company of other devotees with a concentrated mind. By doing so, all your sins, however heinous, will in no time get burnt like a heap of cotton by fire. 63. Abandoning enmity, cultivate devotion to Rama. He is that Pure Existence to be ever meditated upon with a concentrated mind, the one without a name and form, the unitary Eternal Being infilling everything."

Chapter 7

HANUMAN IN QUEST OF THE DIVINE MEDICINAL HERB

Kalanemi in the guise of an ascetic (1-33)

1. These nectarine words of Kalanemi went only to inflame the anger of Ravana and turn his eyes red as copper, just as boiling ghee emits fire when cool water is poured on it. 2. Ravana said, "I am going to kill you, evil minded fellow, who behaves contrary to my orders. Bribed by the enemy, you are speaking to me like a servant of Rama." 3. Kalanemi replied, "O Lord! What is the use of being angry with me! If my words are not to your liking, I shall go and do as commanded by you."

4. The great Asura Kalanemi, being thus directed by Ravana to cause obstruction to Hanuman, started quickly. (5-7). He went to the valley of the mount Himalayas.

Assuming the form of an ascetic, he created there a hermitage with his magical powers and sat within it surrounded by many disciples. Being situated on the way, the Ashrama with its inhabitants came to the notice of Hanuman, who thought for a while on seeing it and felt that he had not seen such an Ashrama when he came here earlier. (8-9). Hanuman thought within himself, "Have I lost my way? Or is what I see before me a mere delusion of my mind? Anyway I shall enter into the Ashrama, see all these ascetics, drink water, and then proceed to Mount Drona."

Reflecting in this way, he went into the Ashrama campus, which was about one Yojana in length (10-12). That Ashrama was full of varieties of fruit-bearing trees like plantain, Sal, plam and jack. Their branches were bending under the load of the fruits. Even animals that were naturally antagonistic to one another, lived there in peace. Seated in the pure and enchanting surroundings of that illusory Ashrama, the great Rakshasa Kalanemi was performing the worship of Siva. Respectfully saluting that Asura in the form of an ascetic, Hanuman said: (13-14). "O holy one! I am the messenger of Rama. My name is Hanuman. For the achievement of an important purpose of Rama, I am going to the milk ocean. I am now extremely thirsty. Where can I get water to drink my fill? O holy one! Please direct me." (15-17). At these words of Hanuman, Kalanemi said, "Drink all the water in my water pot and eat all these ripe fruits you see here. After that you can stay here peacefully for a time and have a nap. You need not in anyway be in a hurry. By the power of my psychic insight, I know all the past, present and future. I see that by Rama's look, Lakshmana and all the monkeys have revived." 18. Hanuman thereupon replied, "My intense thirst cannot be quenched by that much of water as is contained in a Kamandalu (water pot). Show me, therefore, a bigger reservoir of water, a river or a lake." 19. Agreeing to do so, Kalanemi called one of his magically created disciples and said to him, "Go and show an extensive water reservoir to Hanuman." 20. And turning to Hanuman he said, "With your eyes closed, drink as much water as you like and return. I shall impart to you a Mantra which will enable you to recognise the medicinal herb you want to get."

(21-22). Accordingly, Hanuman quickly went to the lake shown by the ascetic disciple and entering into it began to drink the water with closed eyes. Immediately, a fierce crocodile quickly came and grasped Hanuman in its powerful jaws. 23. Hanuman now caught hold of the jaws of the crocodile that was trying to devour him and split the creature into two. 24. Thereupon he saw in the sky the form of a heavenly woman known as Dhanyamali. 25. She said to Hanuman, "O great monkey! I am an Apsara woman who was formerly cursed by an ascetic for certain reasons. By your grace I have now been liberated from the effect of that curse. (26-28). The one you saw in the hermitage is not an ascetic but the great Asura Kalanemi who was despatched here by Ravana to cause obstruction to your passage. He has only put on the false garb of an ascetic. In truth he is a persecutor of ascetics. O noble one! Kill that evil fellow and hurry on to the Mount Drona. I have been purified of my sins by your touch. I am now going to the realm of Brahma, all my taints removed by your touch." With these words, she departed to her heavenly abode. Hanuman now returned to the Ashrama.

(29-31): Seeing Hanuman returning, Kalanemi said, "O great monkey! Why delay any more? Receive from me the Mantra and give me the Dakshina (the holy offering given to a Guru)." Being thus accosted, Hanuman, displaying his clenched fist, said to him. "This is the Dakshina for you!" and gave him a punch. (32-33). Now Kalanemi gave up his disguise of an ascetic and fought with Hanuman adopting various magical stratagems. But Hanuman, who was the messenger of the master magician, Rama, killed that delusion-creating enemy by delivering a blow on his head with his fist. With his head thus split, the Rakshasa died.

Hanuman now hurried to the milk ocean

where he saw Mount Drona. He could not, however, find out the particular medicinal herb that he wanted. So lifting up the mountain itself, he went to the presence of Rama with the speed of wind and said to him, "O great one! Here I have brought the mountain Drona. You do with it what you like. There need not be any more delay." (36-37). The high-souled Rama, on hearing Hanuman's words, was very much pleased. He called Sushena and asked him to treat Lakshmana with the specific medicinal herb that was available on that, mountain. Thereupon Lakshmana came to consciousness like one awakened from sleep and said, (38-39): "O Ravana! Stop stop. Where are you going? I shall kill you even now." Seeing him speaking in this way, Rama smelt the crown of his head out of affection, and then looking at Hanuman, said: "O great monkey hero! O dear one! By your good offices my brother, Lakshmana has been relieved of his ailment."

Awakening of Kumbhakarna

(40-41). With these words Rama, along with monkeys and Sugreeva, following the advise of Vibheeshana, started for battle. All the war-like monkeys, equipped with stones, trees and tops of mountains, started for the battlefield. (42-43). The great Rakshasa Ravana, wounded by Rama's arrows like an elephant by a lion or a serpent by a Garuda, had been defeated and forced to withdraw to his palace. Sitting on his throne, he addressed the Rakshasas thus:

(44-45). "In times of yore Brahma had said that my death will take place at the hands of a human being only, but there is no man living, powerful enough to kill me. Therefore Narayana himself must have undoubtedly come as a man in the shape of Rama, son of Dasaratha, in order to kill me. (46-48). O Rakshasas! In times of old a Rajarshi of the solar dynasty named Anaranya, when killed by me, pronounced a curse on me, saying, 'The Supreme Being will one day incarnate in my line. You along with your sons and relatives will be destroyed by him. Have no doubt about this.' So saying, he left for heaven. Therefore that Supreme Being alone must have been born as Rama to kill me." The dull-witted Kumbhakarna is always asleep. Wake up that Leviathan and bring him to me."

49. Hearing these words of Ravana, those gigantic Rakshasas went immediately to awaken Kumbhakarna. With great effort they woke him up and brought him to the presence of Ravana. 50. He saluted the King and took his seat. King Ravana now addressed his brother in plaintive tone: (51-55). "O Kumbhakarna! Hear what I have got to say. I am in a very difficult situation. My heroic sons and grandsons have all been destroyed by Rama, and the time of my death also seems to be near at hand. What shall I do now? Rama, the powerful son of Dasaratha, in combination with Sugreeva has crossed the ocean with an army, and is about to cause the total destruction of our tribe. All the leading Rakshasas have already been killed in battle by the monkeys. But on the other hand I do not find the monkeys on their side being destroyed in any way. It is for you to effect their destruction. I awakened you for this purpose. Accomplish this difficult task for the sake of your brother."

Kumbhakarna's Sermon (56-70)

56. On hearing these words of the King of the Rakshasas, Kumbhakarna laughed loudly and said: 57. "O King, at the time of our deliberations I told you that the effects of your evil deeds were soon going to befall you. Now those sins of yours are coming to fruition. 58. I told you even before that Rama is Supreme Narayana, and Sita, his Yogamaya. But you did not heed my words. 59. Once when I was sitting at night on a mountain top on an expansive slab of stone, I saw the sage Narada who is usually seen by the Devas only. (60-61). I asked him, 'O worshipful one! Where are you coming from?' Addressed by me in this way Narada replied, 'I am coming from the assembly of the Devas. I shall speak to you about certain matters that were discussed there. 62. The Devas who had been suffering oppression from the Rakshasas approached Mahavishnu with a mind concentrated on Him and full of devotion, and said to that Supreme Being: 'O Lord! Destroy this Ravana who is an oppressor of the three worlds and who cannot be overcome by any other being. 63. Brahma had long ago given him the boon that his death can occur only at the hands of a human being. Therefore deign to be incarnated as a man and destroy the monster Ravana.' 64. Mahavishnu accepted their prayer. That Supreme Being, whose will ever becomes true, is now born in the line of Raghu under the famous name of Rama. 65. He will wipe you all out completely." 'Saying so, the sage departed. So please understand that Rama is the eternal Para-Brahman. 66. Therefore abandon your enmity to him and resign to him who has assumed the form of a man by his Maya. Rama, the leader of the Raghus, is always gracious to those who are devoted to him. 67. Devotion generates knowledge. Devotion bestows Moksha. Whatever is done by one without devotion is as good as non-existent. 68. The sportive incarnations of Mahavishnu are many. Among them that as Rama, who is the pure embodiment of knowledge and purity, is equal to thousand such incarnations. 69. Intelligent people worship Rama always, and without difficulty they attain the Status of Hari. 70. Who-ever with purity of mind meditates on

Chapter 8

DESTRUCTION OF KUMBHAKARNA

Kumbhakarna's Meeting with Vibheeshana (1-16).

1. Hearing these words of Kumbhakarna, Ravana with his eyebrows arched in anger, sprang up from his seat as it were and said:
2. "You are indeed a wise man! I did not call you here to advise me on spiritual matters. If it is acceptable to you, look upon my actions as yours, and go for battle. If not, you can relapse into your sleep. Probably sleep has already overtaken you." 3. Inferring from Ravana's words that he was in a wrathful mood, the powerful Kumbhakarna started quickly for battle. 4. Mountain-like in size, he passed the ramparts and emerged out of the city, causing terror among the monkeys. 5. He raised terrific war cries louder than the waves of the ocean, and gathering the monkeys in his hand, began to eat them up. 6. Seeing this Yama-like Kumbhakarna equal to a mountain with wings, all the monkeys began to run away in fright. (7-9). Kumbhakarna moved amidst the monkey forces destroying them on all sides partly by his Mudgara, partly by eating them up, and partly by crushing them by his hands and feet.

The wise Vibheeshana who had a mace in his hand now saw his elder brother in the battlefield. Approaching him he prostrated at his feet and said, "O High souled one! I am Vibheeshana, your brother. Have mercy on me. (10-12). O brother! I rendered advice to Ravana respectfully in many ways. I advised him to restore Sita to Rama who is Mahavishnu Himself. But he refused to take my advice. Lifting his sword, he ordered me to go out. Surrounded by a band of evil-minded courtiers, he kicked me out of his presence. I came away with four ministers and took shelter under Rama." (13-16). Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Kumbhakarna embraced his brother and said, "O my dear boy! Seeking shelter under Rama, you will be the saviour and protector of the tribe of Rakshasas. I have heard from Narada that you are a great devotee of the Lord. Dear one! You now go away from my presence. Under the influence of liquor my eyes now make no difference between friend and foe." Hearing these words of Kumbhakarna, Vibheeshana prostrated at the feet of his brother and went to the presence of Rama in a very pensive mood.

17. Kumbhakarna now continued to move about like an elephant in rut amidst the monkey army destroying them with his hands and feet. 18. Angry at the sight of this, Rama directed the missile of the wind-god against Kumbhakarna and cut off his right hand that held the mace. At this Kumbhakarna raised a terrific yell. (19-21). That severed arm of his crashed to the ground causing injury to many monkeys. The frightened monkeys withdrew to some distance from the battle-field and watched the battle between Rama and Kumbhakarna. Though his right arm was severed, Kumbhakarna now came forward to attack Rama with a palmyra tree held in his left hand. But Rama cut off that hand also with Indra-missile. (22-24). With both his hands cut off, Kumbhakarna continued to rush at Rama howling. Rama thereupon severed both his legs with two semi-circular-headed arrows, which threw those limbs upto the gates of Lanka with a big bang.

Though bereft of hands and feet, the terrible Kumbhakarna with his mouth wide open like the concavity of a submarine fire, rushed howling towards Rama to swallow him as Rahu does towards the moon. 25. Rama thereupon filled his wide open mouth with sharp and powerful arrows, at which the Rakshasa raised terrific howls. 26. Then with the idea of killing the Rakshasa, Rama released at him a powerful arrow imparted to him by Indra which shone like the sun and was sharp like the thunderbolt weapon. 27. Just as Indra's thunderbolt severed the head of Vritra, Rama's arrow cut off the Rakshasa prince's head which was massive like a mountain and glittered because of his ear-pendents and fangs. 28. Hit by that missile, Kumbhakarna's head fell at the gate of Lanka obstructing its passage, while his body fell in the mighty ocean crushing many aquatic creatures. 29. Thereupon Rishis

Devas, Gandharvas, Pannagas, Pakshis, Siddhas, Yakshas, Guhyakas and Apsaras showered a rain of flowers in their joy and sang Rama's praise.

Narada's Hymn (30-52)

(30-33). To see Rama whose body was beautiful and blue-complexioned, who held a bow in his hand, whose broad eyes had turned a little crimson, whose arms were resplendent with the arrow of Indra held in it, who was casting merciful glances at the monkeys suffering from the wounds caused by arrows,—to see Rama of such description, the great sage Narada came down from the sky, illumining all the quarters by his radiance, and began to sing a hymn of praise with great devotion in a choked voice.

34. Narada said, "Salutation to Thee, O Lord of Lords! O Master of the worlds! O Supreme Spirit! O Eternal Being! O

Lord Narayana! O Support of all! O Witness of the universe! 35. Though Thou art of the nature of Pure Consciousness, out of Thy Maya Thou hast assumed a human form and deludest the world by behaving like one subject to happiness and sorrow. 36. Though residing in the hearts of all and partaking of the nature of self-resplendent Self-consciousness, Thou coverest Thyself with Thy Maya. Only men of pure minds are able to recognise Thee through that veil of Maya. 37. O Rama! With the opening of Thy eyelids, Thou creatorest this universe and with their closing Thou withdrawest it into Thyself. 38. He in whom all this universe is seen, He out of whom all that is moving and unmoving originated, He outside of whom nothing else exists—to Thee Brahman, my salutations! 39. He whom the sages know as the one that has taken the forms of Prakriti, Purusha, Time, the manifested state and the unmanifested condition—to Thee Rama, my salutations! 40. The Veda which has described Thee as changeless, as unconnected with Maya, as Pure Consciousness—that very Veda describes Thee also as having the whole universe for Thy body. 41. This view of the Vedic teaching appears contradictory to some, but the truth about this contradiction will not be clear even to wise men without Thy grace. 42. In this play of Thine with Thy Maya, there is really not the slightest contradiction. It is like mirage in which sun's light appears as water in our visual illusion (wherein light and illusory water coexist). 43. O Rama! It is due to illusory perception that all this universe is attributed to Thee. When the mind is properly instructed, one is able to understand Thy real nature that transcends the Gunas. (44-47). How can limited beings understand Thy formless aspect—the aspect without any attributes and transcending the Gunas? How is worship and devotion possible without an object to be loved and worshipped? Therefore, in this world the really intelligent people adore Thee through Thy incarnations and cross this ocean of Samsara. Various inimical forces like desire, anger etc., oppose and terrify those who address themselves to this task, as cats do with mice. But Thy form shines in the minds of those who ever think of Thee. This ocean of Samsara is indeed like a puddle made by a calf's hoof-mark to those who are devoted to Thy worship, who ever imbibe the nectar of the accounts of Thy glories, and who associate themselves with Thy devotees. 48. Therefore I always meditate in my heart about your form with attributes and wander over all the worlds freely; adored by all the gods. (49-52). For the benefit of the Devas, Thou didst achieve many great things. By the destruction of Kumbhakarna, much of the burden of the world has been removed. Tomorrow, Lakshmana the son of Sumitra is going to destroy Indrajit in battle, and the day after Thou art Thyself going to kill the ten-headed Ravana. I shall be watching all these from the sky along with the Siddhas. Be gracious now to bless me and permit me to go to the abode of the celestials." Having thus hymned and taken leave of Rama, and having received the adoration of the celestials, the holy sage Narada departed to the sinless abode of Brahma.

(53-56). Hearing of the destruction of his powerful brother Kumbhakarna at the hands of Rama of matchless prowess, Ravana was stricken with deep sorrow and fell on the floor in a swoon. Recovering consciousness, he sat up and began to bemoan the loss of his brother. Now Indrajit, hearing of his uncle's death and witnessing his father's sorrow, came forward and said to the afflicted Ravana, "O great one! Abandon your grief. Where is the cause of grief so long as I, Meghanada, am alive? There is absolutely no reason for you to be downcast. Abandoning all your grief, be at peace. (57-59). I shall set everything right, I shall destroy all your enemies. I have no doubt about it. I shall immediately go to the Nikumbhila (the place for the fire-sacrifices for black magic), propitiate the fire-deity, and obtain the chariot and equipments necessary to become invincible by the enemy." Saying so, he went to the Nikumbhila, put on robes and garlands of red colour, applied red sandal paste to his body, and observing silence, began the fire sacrifice.

Vibheeshana's advice (60-68)

enterprise of Meghanada, Vibheeshana informed Rama of it and said, "If the evil-minded Meghanada is allowed to complete the sacrifice, he will become invincible by Devas and Asuras. Therefore, I would like to have him killed immediately by Lakshmana. So deign to send mighty Lakshmana with me on this mission. Your brother will surely be able to destroy Meghanada." 63. Thereupon Rama said, "I shall myself go to destroy the whole tribe of Rakshasas with the missile of Agni," (64-68). To this Vibheeshana replied, "The death of this evil-minded Asura can be effected only by one who has been without food or sleep for twelve years. None else can kill him. This is a boon given to him by Brahma. Now Lakshmana ever since he left Ayodhya with you, from that day onwards has never cared to eat or sleep on account of his engrossment in your service. I have come to know all about this. Therefore, O great Lord, please ask Lakshmana to come with me quickly. He is none but that Adisesha who bears the weight of the world. He is sure to kill Indrajit. Thou art the supreme Narayana, the master of the whole universe and Lakshmana is Adisesha. You two, who are the directors of the play of this universe, are now born on this earth in order to free it of its burdens."

FALL OF INDRAJIT

Interception of the Homa (1-24)

(1-3). Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Rama said as follows: "O Vibheeshana! I know everything about that terrible Asura—that he is a master of all magic, that he is very brave, that he knows the use of the Brahma missile, and that he is an adept in magical warfare. I know also about the vow observed by Lakshmana during my service. I kept silent over his abandonment of food etc., only with the fore-knowledge of the great things he would have to accomplish." He then called Lakshmana and said, (4-7). "O Lakshmana! Go for battle accompanied by the great army and its leaders like Hanuman, and destroy Indrajit, the son of Ravana. Also Jambavan with his army and Vibheeshana with his ministers will accompany you. The wise Vibheeshana is well-acquainted with those places where the battle is to take place." At these words of Rama, Lakshmana, the mighty, selected a new bow, and getting ready to start with Vibheeshana, touched the feet of Rama and said: 8. "Now the arrows shot from my bow after piercing the son of Ravana, will go down to the Patala to take a dip in the river Bhogavati."

9. Having said so and having circumambulated Rama, Lakshmana started for the destruction of Indrajit, impatient to demonstrate his prowess. 10. Accomanied by a big army of monkeys, Hanuman followed him. So did Vibheeshana hurry with his ministers. (11-12). Jambavan and his force of bears hurried behind Lakshmana. Reaching the premises of the sacrificial hall, Lakshmana saw there a huge army of Rakshasas. The highly skilled archer that he was, he strung his bow and got ready for battle. (13-14). Now Jambavan along with Angada, as also Vibheeshana the Rakshasa leader, said to Lakshmana, "See that huge army of Rakshasas spread like a mass of blue clouds. We have now to take steps to pierce the ranks of that Rakshasa army arrayed for battle. (15-16). When the army of Rakshasas is pierced, Indrajit the son of Ravana, will be visible. Before he completes his fire sacrifice, you have to face him in battle.

Annihilate that evil-minded fellow, who is a destructive genius and a violator of Dharma.

(17-19). Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Lakshmana of auspicious form, released a volley of arrows against the army of Indrajit, and the monkey leaders attacked them with boulders, hillocks and trees. The Rakshasas too fought back with battle-axes, sharp arrows, swords, pestles and Tomoras. Great was the tumult when the two armies thus clashed in fierce battle. 20 On seeing his army thus attacked, Indrajit stopped the sacrifice and left the sacrificial hall and came out immediately.(21-22). Taking a bow, he ascended his chariot and in great anger addressed Lakshmana, "Know that I am Meghanada. You shall not go away alive from my presence." With this challenge, he came to the midst of battle. (23-24). He saw before him his uncle Vibheeshana and addressed these harsh words to him, "You were born and brought up among us. You are a direct brother of my father. Still abandoning your own people, you have become a servant of our enemy.. You are demonstrating your treachery against me, who am like a son to you. You are the most sinful among the sinners."

Fight with Indrajit and his death (25-68)

(25-26). Having said so, he looked at Lakshmana sitting on the shoulders of Hanuman. Seated in his magnificent chariot, which was equipped with all kinds of missiles and other weapons, he lifted his great bow and twanging it, declared, "O monkey!

My arrows are now going to consume your Prana." 27. Thereupon Lakshmana, the destroyer of all foes, began to shower arrows, hissing like an angry serpent. Now Indrajit, roused to great anger, looked at Lakshmana with his reddened eyes. (28-31). Struck by Lakshmana's arrows sharp as the thunderbolt weapon of Indra, Indrajit lost his consciousness for a moment. Recovering from it presently he said to Lakshmana in great anger, with arrows attached to his bow: "In my first battle with you, you do not seem to have had sufficient experience of my prowess. I shall now demonstrate it to you. Stand here for a while." With these words, he struck Lakshmana with seven arrows. (32-33). With ten sharp and powerful arrows, he wounded Hanuman. Then highly excited with anger, he sent a hundred arrows at Vibheeshana. In return,

Lakshmana also covered him with arrows. 34. Struck by Lakshmana's arrows, the shining armour of Indrajit was shattered into bits and fell into the back of the chariot and on the ground. (35-37). Ravana's son, now full of wrath, sent numerous arrows at Lakshmana and shattered his armour also. Thus returning blow for blow, they traversed the battlefield up and down, locked in fierce combat. 38. With their limbs covered with arrows and bleeding wounds, those two heroes fought for long a drawn battle. (39-41). In the meantime, heroic Lakshmana destroyed with five arrows the chariot of Indrajit along with its horses and charioteer. He showed his expertise by cutting off the enemy's bow also. In great haste, Indrajit took up another bow and strung it, but Lakshmana cut off that also with three arrows and wounded him with many shafts. (42-44). Heroic Indrajit now took up a third bow and with arrows shining like the sun's beams wounded Lakshmana and filled all the quarters with volleys of arrows. Lakshmana next took up the Indra missile. Drawing the string of his strong bow upto the ear and attaching to it that missile and aiming it at Indrajit as the target, he said with remembrance of Rama's feet in his mind: (45-46). "If Rama, the unrivalled hero is devoted to Dharma and truth, may this arrow destroy the son of Ravana." With these words, he drew the bow-string to his ear and let the unswerving missile speed towards Indrajit. 47. That

(48-51). Delighted at the destruction of Indrajit, the Devas sang the praise of Rama again and again, and addressed hymns to him. They showered a rain of flowers. Indra, the celestials and the Maharsis joyously gathered in the sky. The kettle drums of the Devas sounded on high. The sky became clear and the earth became firm. Now with everyone there raising cries of hail to him, Lakshmana who had got over his exhaustion, sounded his conch, and with a lion-roar twanged his bow-string again and again. (52-54). That sound of victory refreshed and gladdened the monkeys, and they became free from exhaustion. Lakshmana, with all the joyous monkey leaders glorifying his deeds, now went along with Hanuman and Vibheeshana to Rama in great humility. He saluted his brother who was none but Narayana and said, "O noblest of Raghu's line! By your blessing Indrajit has been killed." 55. Hearing these devoted words of Lakshmana, Rama embraced him and with great affection, smelt the crown of his head and said: 56. "O Lakshmana! You have done well. I am much pleased with you. You have accomplished a very difficult task. With the death of Indrajit, victory over the Rakshasas is an accomplished task. (57-58). In three days, you have managed to destroy him. Now, really speaking, I am without an antagonist. Spurred by his sorrow at the death of his son, Ravana is sure to come for a fight with me. I shall then kill him."

(59-61). Hearing about the death of the mighty Meghanada, Ravana swooned and fell on the floor. He bemoaned the loss of his son very bitterly. Afflicted by sorrow, he recalled the actions and qualities of his dead son and said, "Henceforward, with the death of Indrajit, the Devas, the Maharsis and the protectors of the quarters will sleep in peace." Ravana bemoaned his son's death in many ways like this. (62-63). Then seized by great wrath, he ordered all the Asuras to go for battle, even knowing that total destruction was before them. That heroic Ravana, stricken by the sorrow of his son's death, now gave himself up to thoughtless anger and resolved to kill Sita. 64. Seeing Ravana approaching her in a wrathful mood, sword in hand, Sita, who was surrounded by Rakshasis, was stricken with great fear and sorrow. 65. Fortunately, Suparsva, an intelligent and pure-minded minister of Ravana, intervened and said to him: (66-67). "You are the brother of Vaisravana and an adept in the rituals and practices of the Veda. You are noted for your devotion to duty and for your many virtues. How then can you even think of killing a woman? All of us together shall go to war and kill Rama and Lakshmana. After that you can make Sita your own." With such advice he turned back Ravana from his resolve to kill Sita. 68. Now the evil-minded Ravana, accepting the righteous words of his adviser, came back to his palace with his mind stupefied by sorrow. Then he entered the assembly along with all his friends and advisers.

OBSTRUCTING RAVANA'S 'HOMA

Ravana's Fire-Sacrifice (1-10)

(1-3). Taking counsel in that assembly of Rakshasas and ministers, Ravana, with whatever forces were left, now resolved to go to attack Rama, just like a moth in the company of many other moths rushing towards fire. All those Rakshasas were killed in battle by Rama. The ten-headed Ravana was also wounded in his chest by Rama's arrows. He therefore turned back and entered Lanka quickly.

4. Having experienced the prowess of Rama and Hanuman several times, Ravana now went to his teacher Sukra immediately. (5-6). The ten-headed Ravana, after prostrating before Sukra said, "O holy one! Rama has destroyed Lanka along with the Rakshasa overlords and all our sons and relatives. All the powerful Asuras are already dead. How is it that such a vast calamity has befallen me when you my teacher are there?" (7-9). Hearing this representation of Ravana, Sukra, the teacher of Asuras, said to him, "Even exerting yourself to the utmost, do in secrecy a fire-sacrifice. If you are able to do it without obstruction, you will get out of that sacrificial fire a mighty chariot along with horses, bow and quiver. Equipped with all these, you will be invincible. 10. Learn the necessary Mantras from me and go home and do the fire-sacrifice quickly." Following this instruction, Ravana returned

Monkeys Obstructing the Fire-Sacrifice (11-34)

(11-12). Bolting all the gates of Lanka and collecting with great effort all the requisites for black magic, Ravana entered into the cave observing silence, and began the fire-sacrifice. (13-14). When the columns of smoke issuing from the sacrificial fire became visible, Vibheeshana, the brother of Ravana, was stricken with fear. Showing these columns of smoke to Rama, he said, "The ten-headed Ravana has started a fire-sacrifice. If he is able to complete it, he will become invincible. Therefore it is necessary to direct the monkey forces to obstruct the Homa." 15. Rama agreed to do so and with the concurrence of Sugreeva, directed the great monkeys like Angada, Hanuman and other powerful heroes to accomplish this task. (16-18). They crossed the walls and entered the residence of Ravana. About ten crores of monkey forces went and plastered the Asura guard of the palace and all the horses and the elephants they found there. In the morning, Vibheeshana's wife, Sarama, showed by signs where the underground sacrificial chamber was located. (19-20). Angada the powerful, by a kick of his foot, broke open the stone door of the cave and entered into it. He saw there the ten-headed Ravana sitting in a steady posture with his eyes closed. Angada ordered all the monkeys to enter into the cave. They created an uproar, beating all the attendants there. (21-22.) All the materials for the Homa were scattered by them pell-mell. Hanuman forcibly took away from Ravana's hand the sacrificial ladle and delivered blows on him with it. The monkeys bit him with their teeth and thrashed him with sticks. 23. But in spite of all this, Ravana did not give up his meditation because of his desire for victory. 24. The fast-moving Angada now went into the inner apartment of Ravana's residence, and catching hold of Ravana's wife Mandodari by her locks, dragged her to the presence of Ravana, whereupon she began to weep like a masterless woman. Angada now tore away her gem-embedded overcoat. 25. Many a precious gem and necklace was scattered all round her person. 26. Her gem-bedecked waist-belt also fell down causing her lower garment to drop. 27. All the ornaments she was wearing dropped down. The jubilant monkeys now brought in all the daughters of the Devas and the Gandharvas also from Ravana's inner apartments.

28. Mandodari, weeping bitterly before Ravana, began to say to him: 29. "In your very presence, your wife is being dragged by her locks by your enemies. You are a shameless man to tolerate it. (30-34). What is the good of your Homa? Have you no sense of shame? A man whose wife is molested by his enemies must court death then and there in an effort to save her. Death is better than life in such a situation. Alas! O Meghanada! Your mother is being molested by the monkeys. Alas! If you were alive, I would not have had to stand such sufferings. My husband has renounced both shame and wife in his anxiety to live". Ravana, on hearing these laments of Mandodari, got up from his seat, and taking hold of a sword, struck Angada on his waist, saying, "Hands off her." Thereupon the monkeys freed Mandodari and left the place, after having thus obstructed

Ravana's Advice to Mandodari (35-43).

35. All of them now went to Rama in great joy. Ravana, for consoling his wife, now began to say as follows: (36-43). "O glorious lady! This world is under the decree of Providence. A man born here has to undergo all kinds of experiences. O handsome lady! Resorting to knowledge, you abandon your sorrow. Sorrow is the result of ignorance. Sorrow destroys knowledge. We associate 'I-sense' with the non-spirit i.e. the body, out of ignorance only. Attachment to sons, wives etc., arises from the above misunderstanding, out of which comes this cycle of births and deaths. Joy, sorrow, fear; anger, greed, delusion and desire, as also birth death, old age etc., are all born of ignorance. The real Self is alone, unaffected, pure, distinct from all objects and untainted. He is of the nature of bliss and consciousness, and free from every kind of change. For that pure existence, there is no coming together with, or separation from, anything. Knowing this, be free from fear, O perfect one! I shall now go immediately and return after killing Rama and Lakshmana. If it happens otherwise, I shall be killed by Rama's arrows, powerful like the thunderbolt. weapon. If that happens, I shall be attaining to His Status. In that case, O my dear wife, according to my instructions, you perform my funeral rites. Kill Sita and you immolate yourself in the flames in which my body is burnt.

Conversation between Mandodari & Ravana (44-61)

44. On hearing these words of Ravana, the sorrow-stricken Mandodari said, "Hear my words which are nothing but the truth, and act accordingly. 45. Rama cannot be conquered by you or by anybody else. He is none but the Supreme Lord of all Nature and all living beings. 46. In an earlier Kalpa, the Supreme Lord Rama, the lover of devotees, took the shape of a Fish and saved Vaivasvata Manu from all dangers. 47. At the time of the churning of the milk ocean, he assumed the form of a Tortoise, about a lakh of Yojanas in dimension and held up the golden mountain on His back. 48. Taking the form of a Boar, He lifted the earth from the ocean after destroying Hiranyaksha noted for his evil deeds. 49. Rama, assuming the form of a Man-lion, killed Hiranyakasipu, the son of Diti and the enemy of all the worlds. 50. As Vamana, Rama the lord of Raghus, measured the whole universe by three strides, bound up Bali and gave the three worlds to His devotee Indra. 51. Born as Rama with the battle axe, He destroyed numerous Rakshasas born as Kshatriyas on earth and made a gift of the earth to the sage Kasyapa. 52. That same Supreme Being, in order to effect your destruction, is now born as man in the line of the Raghus. 53. For the destruction of my children and for your own destruction, you have forcibly abducted his wife Sita from the forest. Why have you done this? 54. At least now, you send away Sita to Rama's presence and bestow the kingdom to Vibheeshana. Let us afterwards take to the life of forest-dwelling ascetics."

55. On hearing these words of Mandodari, Ravana replied, "O good lady! After having caused the destruction of my sons, of my brother and of the community of the Rakshasas through Rama, how can I now even think of saving my life by departing to the forest? 56. I shall fight with Rama. Pierced by the speedy arrows of his, I shall attain to the Status of Vishnu. 57. I know that Rama is Vishnu and that Sita, the daughter of Janaka, is Lakshmi. It is with the full knowlege of this that I forcibly abducted Sita from the forest. 58. By courting death at the hands of Rama, I shall leave you in this world of Samsara and myself attain to the Supreme Status of Vishnu. O dear one! For this purpose, I brought Sita and now I am going to die with my relatives. 59. That State, pure and blissful, which liberation-seekers attain—that very goal, I shall gain by being killed by Rama in battle. 60. All my sins done in this world shall be washed off by death at Rama's hand and I shall gain liberation, which is a rare attainment for a Jiva. 61. I shall cross this ocean of Samsara having for its waves the five Klesas (ignorance, I-sense with regard to the body, attachment, anger and fear); and filled with aquatic creatures constituted of wife, children, friends, wealth, relatives and the like; terrific by the submarine fire of one's own anger; and dangerous with the net of sexuality."

Chapter 11

DESTRUCTION OF RAVANA

Ravana in the Battlefield (1-11)

1. After speaking lovingly as above to his queen Mandodari, Ravana hurried to join battle with Rama. (2-3). Surrounded by fierce Rakshasas, Ravana of terrific appearance quickly started, seated in his massive chariot. The chariot with sixteen wheels was drawn by donkeys with their faces resembling devils. It was heavily armoured and had a strong central pole for yoking the horses. It was equipped with all kinds of weapons and missiles and every kind of equipment needed for battle. 4. Seeing the fierce and relentless warrior Ravana approaching, the monkey forces under Rama were stricken with fear. (5-6). Hanuman of matchless prowess now sprang up to give battle to Ravana. He clenched his fist firmly and delivered a punch on Ravana's chest. Stricken that way, Ravana fell down on his knees in a swoon. 7. Within a few minutes he recovered and said to Hanuman that he was a hero deserving recognition. (8-9). Hanuman replied, "O Ravana! It is a matter of shame for me that you are still alive after receiving my blow. Now you strike me and after that I shall give you a blow which will deprive you of your life." (10-11). Agreeing to this, Ravana struck Hanuman on his chest with his fist. Hanuman became dizzy, and was for a short while unconscious. After recovery, he was about to kill Ravana with his fist, but frightened by the prospect of Hanuman's blow, Ravana escaped to another part of the battlefield.

Attack on Rama (12-25)

(12-16). In battle, Hanuman, Angada, Nala and Neela destroyed the Rakshasas named Agnivarna the fire-coloured one, Sarparoma the serpent-haired one, Khadgaroma the sword-haired one, and Vrischikaroma the scorpion haired one. The four on destroying these four Asuras in battle, individually raised lion-roars as a sign of victory and went to meet Rama. Terribly incensed by the death of his followers, the cruel-hearted Ravana, biting his lips and rolling his eye balls, rushed at Rama himself to join battle with him. Seated in his chariot, the ten-headed Ravana showered very sharp arrows on Rama as a cloud showers rain. He wounded also all the monkeys standing in front of Rama. 17. Rama with his mind concentrated, now sent volleys of fiery and gold-embellished arrows at Ravana.

18. Seeing that Ravana was seated in his chariot and Rama standing on the ground, Indra the king of the Devas called his charioteer Matali and said: 19. "O virtuous one! Take my chariot to Rama, the chief of the Raghus, who is fighting, standing on the ground; go quickly to the earth and accomplish this task." 20. On being so instructed, Matali the charioteer of Indra, saluted him and harnessed the green-coloured horses to the chariot. 21. To bring about the victory of Rama, Matali arrived on the earth with incredible speed.

With palms folded in salutation, he said to Rama, "O chief of the Raghus! I have been sent here by Indra the king of the gods. (22-25). The chariot belongs to Lord Indra, the king of the gods. It has been sent to help you to gain victory. It is equipped with the well-decorated bow of Indra, unbreakable armours, swords and a pair of celestial quivers. O Rama! Ascend this chariot, and accompanied by me, destroy Ravana as Indra did Vritra." On being so requested, Rama, after circumambulating that divine chariot, ascended it in order to bring about welfare and prosperity in the world.

Fight Between Rama & Ravana (26-50)

(26-28). Afterwards there took place a hair-raising and terrible battle between Rama and the powerful Ravana. The great archer that he was, Rama neutralised the fire-missile of Ravana with fire-missile, and celestial missile with celestial missile. Terribly excited, Ravana now directed the fierce Rakshasa-missile against Rama. 29. The shining missiles released from Ravana's bow took the form of numerous poisonous serpents which surrounded Rama. 30. All the quarters were filled with arrows having the face of serpents and vomiting fire. 31. Seeing serpents everywhere, Rama now released the terrible Sauparna missile. 32. The missiles released by Rama took the shape of Garuda and destroyed the serpents on all sides. 33. When Rama thus counteracted his missiles, the ten-headed Ravana once more began to shower arrows on Rama. (34-35). Wounding Rama with numerous arrows, Ravana now wounded

35. Matahi the charioteer, cut down the golden standard, and inflicted wounds on the horses drawing the chariot of Indra. 36. Seeing Rama in a difficult situation, the Devas, Gandharvas, Charanas, manes and Maharshis grew anxious. So also did Vibheestana and the monkey leaders.

37. The ten-headed Ravana holding bows and arrows in his twenty arms appeared like the mount Mainaka. 38. Highly incensed Rama's eyes now became red and his eyebrows got knitted. He now looked at Ravana as if he were going to burn him up in a mood of anger that was appropriate for the occasion. (39-40). Holding the wonderful bow resembling the bow of Indra himself, he released fiery arrows at the enemy from close quarters and looked at him as if he were going to burn him by his looks.

41. Rama, now realising that the time for the destruction of Ravana was approaching, revealed his prowess to all through his shining brilliance. 42. Drawing his bow and aiming at Ravana, Rama appeared like death at the time of the world's dissolution—a sight which gave great joy to the monkey army. 43. Seeing the angry face of Rama as he approached the enemy, all beings trembled in fear, and there were tremors on the earth. 44. Rama's terrific form and the evil-foreboding omens filled all beings with fear. Even Ravana got frightened. 45. In order to see the battle that resembled in its ferocity the world's dissolution, all the Devas, Siddhas and Gandharvas assembled in the sky in their aerial vehicles.

Bleeding profusely, these heads fell down on the ground like palmyra fruits from the tree. 47. In the chaos created by battle, neither day time nor night, neither their junction time nor the quarters could be perceived distinctly. Even the persons of Rama and Ravana engaged in battle could not be recognised. Now Rama began to think in wonder. 48. "I have cut down hundred and one heads of Ravana; still I do not find Ravana dying." 49. Then Rama, who was master of all missiles, began to think within himself in spite of the fact that he had all these missiles under his control. 50. "Those missiles with which Rakshasas of great prowess have been killed in large numbers are now found ineffective in respect of Ravana."

Death of Ravana (51-76)

(51-52). When Rama was thus thinking

anxiously, Vibheeshana who was standing near by said, "It is well-known that he has been granted boons by Brahma. His heads and hands if severed would come up again immediately. Such was the boon given to him by Brahma. (53-54). In his umbilicus, there is a certain mass of Amrita deposited. Burn it up with Agni missile. After that it will be possible to kill him." Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Rama of great prowess attached the fire-missile to his bow and wounded Ravana in his umbilicus. 55. After that, mighty Rama full of wrath began to cut-off Ravana's heads and arms. 56. Now Ravana with a view to kill Vibheeshana, threw his mighty weapon called Shakti at him. (57-58). With his shining arrows, Rama cut that Shakti to pieces. As several of his heads had been cut, Ravana's prowess was in abeyance. and seeing his fallen heads, he became very much dejected. He was left with only one head and two arms. 59. Next, incensed very much, Ravana sent showers of arrows and other weapons at Rama and Rama did the same in respect of him. (60-61). The fierce battle causing horripilations in on-lookers continued for long. Then Matali the charioteer reminded Rama saying, "O Rama! Scion of the Raghu's line! Release Brahma missile for his death without delay. The pre-determined time for his death has now arrived. 62. O Rama! Do not cut-off his head. He cannot be killed by severing his head. He has to be struck at vulnerable points in his body." 63. Reminded thus by the words of Matali, Rama took an arrow that hissed like a serpent in its course. (64-67). That Brahma-missile had Vayu at its rear, Surya and Pavaka in its front, Akasa in its middle and Lokapalas on its sides. It was as weighty as the mountains Meru and Mandara. Resplendent in itself, it shone like a sun now. Now Rama of very great prowess repeated the Mantras connected with this wonderful missile and attached it to his bow according to the directions given in the science of archery. 68. When Rama attached that missile to his bow, all beings trembled and there was tremor on the earth. 69. In a very wrathful mood, Rama pulled his bow to its maximum with all his power and sent that arrow at the vital part of Ravana. 70. Like thunderbolt weapon released by Indra, that irresistible missile with a terrific end struck Ravana in his chest like the god of death himself. 71. That missile capable of piercing any target went deep into the chest of Ravana and pierced his heart. 72. After destroying the life-energies of Ravana, it spent its force only on piercing the earth. After that it came back to the quiver of Rama.

73. From the hands of Ravana his mighty bow along with its arrow fell down. Lifeless, he fell to the ground like an object caught in a whirlwind. 74. On seeing him dead, all the surviving Rakshasas felt masterless, became panicky with fear and fled in all directions. (75-76). Now that the enemy had been conquered, the monkeys were filled with joy and began to talk loudly among themselves about Ravana's death and Rama's victory.

delightful sound of the kettle-drums of the Devas from all sides; showers of flowers fell on Rama. The Munis, the Siddhas, the Charanas and the other inhabitants of the heavenly regions sang hymns of praise, and everywhere in the sky the Apsara damsels began to dance. 79. All the Devas witnessed how from the body of Ravana, a brilliance equal to that of the sun emerged and entered into Rama. (80-82). The Devas said, "Look at the good fortune of the high-souled Ravana. Even we, virtuous persons like Devas, who are special objects of Mahavishnu's mercy, are immersed in Samsara characterised by fear and sorrow. But see how this Rakshasa who is noted for his cruelty, who abducts other people's women, who kills ascetics, who is antagonistic to Vishnu, who is characterised by intense Tamas—how even he has entered into Rama in the sight of all."

Matali the charioteer, cut down the golden standard, and inflicted wounds on the horses drawing the chariot of Indra. 36. Seeing Rama in a difficult situation, the Devas, Gandharvas, Charanas, manes and Maharshis grew anxious. So also did Vibheeshana and the monkey leaders.

37. The ten-headed Ravana holding bows and arrows in his twenty arms appeared like the mount Mainaka. 38. Highly incensed Rama's eyes now became red and his eye-brows got knitted. He now looked at Ravana as if he were going to burn him up in a mood of anger that was appropriate for the occasion. (39-40). Holding the wonderful bow resembling the bow of Indra himself, he released fiery arrows at the enemy from close quarters and looked at him as if he were going to burn him by his looks.

41. Rama, now realising that the time for the destruction of Ravana was approaching, revealed his prowess to all through his shining brilliance. 42. Drawing his bow and aiming at Ravana, Rama appeared like death at the time of the world's dissolution—a sight which gave great joy to the monkey army. 43. Seeing the angry face of Rama as he approached the enemy, all beings trembled in fear, and there were tremors on the earth. 44. Rama's terrific form and the evil-foreboding omens filled all beings with fear. Even Ravana got frightened. 45. In order to see the battle that resembled in its ferocity the world's dissolution, all the Devas, Siddhas and Gandharvas assembled in the sky in their aerial vehicles.

Bleeding profusely, these heads fell down on the ground like palmyra fruits from the tree. 47. In the chaos created by battle, neither day time nor night, neither their junction time nor the quarters could be perceived distinctly. Even the persons of Rama and Ravana engaged in battle could not be recognised. Now Rama began to think in wonder. 48. "I have cut down hundred and one heads of Ravana; still I do not find Ravana dying." 49. Then Rama, who was master of all missiles, began to think within himself in spite of the fact that he had all these missiles under his control. 50. "Those missiles with which Rakshasas of great prowess have been killed in large numbers are now found ineffective in respect of Ravana."

Death of Ravana (51-76)

(51-52). When Rama was thus thinking

anxiously, Vibheeshana who was standing near by said, "It is well-known that he has been granted boons by Brahma. His heads and hands if severed would come up again immediately. Such was the boon given to him by Brahma. (53-54). In his umbilicus, there is a certain mass of Amrita deposited. Burn it up with Agni missile. After that it will be possible to kill him." Hearing these words of Vibheeshana, Rama of great prowess attached the fire-missile to his bow and wounded Ravana in his umbilicus. 55. After that, mighty Rama full of wrath began to cut-off Ravana's heads and arms. 56. Now Ravana with a view to kill Vibheeshana, threw his mighty weapon called Shakti at him. (57-58). (83-87). To the Devas who were speaking in this way, Narada said with a smile, "O Devas who know the secret of Dharma! Listen. Ravana, on account of his antagonism to Rama, has always been talking about him with his servants, besides ever anxiously thinking about him. Fearing that he would meet with death at Rama's hand, he was in the habit of seeing the spectre of Rama everywhere. Every night, in his dreams, he was seeing Rama. This anger of Ravana towards Rama has served him in a better way than teachers and relatives. In the end, being killed by Rama, he has been rid of all his sins. Released from all bondage thereby, he has become one with Rama. 88. Even if a person is sinful, evil-minded, addicted to other people's wealth and women, if he, be it out of love, or fear, thinks of Rama, he becomes purified in mind and freed from the sins of numerous births. He thereby attains directly the eternal Vaikuntha, the highly coveted Status of Vishnu who has incarnated Himself as Rama. 89. May heroic Rama protect me--Rama who killed in battle Ravana incapable of being conquered by anyone in the three worlds, who with his left hand holds his bow resting firmly on the ground, who is whirling an arrow with his other hand, the ends of whose eyes are red-tinged, whose body is covered with wounds caused by arrows, who has the brilliance of numerous suns, whose form is beautified by the glory of victory, and who is the object of praise of all divinities."

EVENTS AFTER RAVANA'S DEATH

Lakshmana's Sermon to Vibheeshana (1-28)

(1-2). Now Rama cast his joyous glance at Vibheeshana, Hanuman, Angada, Lakshmana, Sugreeva, Jambavan and others and said, “By the heroism you all have displayed, I have been able to kill Ravana. (3-4). Your holy fame will last so long as the sun and moon abide. By reciting these exploits of yours in relation to me, which can remove the sins of people and purify the world, men will attain the supreme goal.”

5. In the meantime, seeing the fallen body of Ravana, Mandodari and other women who were under Ravana's protection, fell down before Ravana's body and began to bemoan his death. 6. Vibheeshana, too, overcome with great sorrow, fell by Ravana's side and indulged in mourning in various ways. 7. Thereupon Rama said to Lakshmana, “You enlighten Vibheeshana about his duties. Let him do the cremation of his brother. Why should it be delayed? 8. Mandodari and other wives of Ravana are all mourning. Let Vibheeshana come forward and pacify them.”

9. On being so instructed by Rama, Lakshmana went to the dead body of Ravana, by the side of which Vibheeshana was lying like another dead body. (10-12). Lakshmana said as follows to sorrow-stricken Vibheeshana, “O Vibheeshana! What is he to you—he for whom you are mourning? What was he before his body was generated? What relation has he now after death and hereafter? Who after all are you to him? Just as in a flowing river, particles of sand and water come together for a time and are separated by the current, so are men joined and separated in this world by the flow of time. 13. Among seeds sown, some sprout and produce other seeds, while some perish without sprouting. Their relationship is casual and uncertain. Just so are all relationships brought about by the force of the Lord's Maya between beings born of other beings. (Or, just as in a quantity of grains, some, on being fried, mix with others and then disunite, in the same way do creatures unite and disunite, impelled by the Maya of the Lord). 14. You, he and all others are alike the creatures of Time. One's birth and death will occur as pre-determined in respect of time and place. 15. The Lord of all, who is unborn and unmotivated, engages Himself in creation like a child. He plays with the help of these beings, who are not free but are under His control. He makes them the cause of generation and destruction among themselves. 16. A body is always born of another body ensouled by a Jiva, just as a seed can come out of another similar seed. But the Jiva is eternal while the body is short-lived. This relationship between the body and the Jiva is not real but born of delusion and ignorance. (17-18). The various differentiating forms of birth, growth, death and enjoyment of fruits of Karma attributed to the Seer (Self), are like the attribution to fire of the shape it assumes wholly due to the fuel that it burns. In contact with the fuel the fire takes various forms and shapes according to the form and shape of the fuel. But the fire in itself has no such forms. It only burns and shines. So also none of the attributes and experiences of the body really belong to the Self who is only the Witness. They appear to be that of the Self because of the connection of the Seer with the body arising out of ignorance. (19-20). A caravansarai is really an empty place, but it seems to be full when many people gather there temporarily. In the same way when unreal entities are firmly held as real, multiplicity seems to rule everywhere. Even when a man is alive, there is no experience of Samsara for him in deep sleep, as there is no sense of 'I' there. In the same way for the liberated one who is without the sense of 'I', the objects of worldly life do not shine. Therefore, know all this to be mental creation born of Maya and hence abandon the false sense of 'I and mine'. Fix your mind on Rama, who is none but the Lord who has taken a human form. He is the Supreme Being, the highest Self who, though transcendent, has assumed the form as the All. 21. Releasing the mind little by little from its entanglement with external objects by recognising that such contacts are harmful, connect it with the bliss that is Rama. (22-23). It is due to the sense of identification with the body that ideas of relationships like that of brother, father, mother, friend, dear one etc. arise. With the power of discrimination, when one is able to differentiate the Self from the body, then who is one's relative, who is one's mother, father and friend? It is as a result of false knowledge that there are ideas like wife, home and other possessions. (24-28). Objects of sense life, various kinds of wealth, army, treasury, attendants, kingdom, landed property and sons and relatives are all born of ignorance. Therefore, they are all of momentary duration and are subject to destruction. Always contemplating in one's heart in a spirit of devotion and undergoing the predetermined enjoyments and sufferings born of one's own action (Prarabha), perform your duties like governing the country. Now abandon your mood of sorrow and get up. Without thinking of the past and the future, concern yourself with the present only, and behave as it is proper. Thereby, you will not be affected by the evils of Samsara. Rama is ordering you to perform the funeral obsequies of your brother. O intelligent one! Perform all those rites according to scriptural dictates. Console

Cremation of Ravana (29-39)

29. Hearing this inspiring advice of Lakshmana, Vibheeshana abandoned sorrow and delusion and went to meet Rama. 30. The righteous Vibheeshana, having pondered over the words of Lakshmana on right conduct, decided to obey Rama's instructions and said in reply. 31. "O Lord! I am unfit to cremate one who was merciless, murderous, untruthful, unrighteous, immoral and lusting after others' wives." (32-34). Hearing his words, Rama was much pleased and said, "Enmity extends only up to death. We have accomplished our task (and we need not think further about the past). Perform his funeral rites. He is now as dear to me as he is to you."

Complying with Rama's order, Vibheesha the righteous now consoled the wise queen Mandodari by kind words. (35-36). A firm adherent of Dharma, he now hurried all his relatives to attend to the rites of cremation. He now made a funeral pyre according to scriptural injunctions, and then performed all those obsequial rites for Ravana along with his ministers and relatives according to the procedures to be adopted for one eligible for performing Agnihotra. (37-39). Vibheeshana lit the funeral fire according to injunctions and consigned Ravana's body to it. He then took his bath, and dressed in wet cloth, offered the departed one sesame seeds with water. He offered him water also separately and bent down his head in prostration. He then consoled all those women again and again, and persuaded them to go back to the city.

Vibheeshana's Installation (40-50)

40. After all the Rakshasa women had gone back to the city, Vibheeshana in all humility went and stood before Rama. 41. In the company of Lakshmana and Sugreeva and the army, Rama now rejoiced as Indra did after the destruction of Vritra. 42. Matali, the heavenly charioteer, now circumambulated Rama and with his permission went back to the heavenly regions. (43-44). Rama then said to Lakshmana in a very joyous mood, "I have awarded even earlier this kingdom of Lanka to Vibheeshana. You go even now to the central part of Lanka and along with the Brahmanas administer the installation bath to Vibheeshana to the accompaniment of all Mantras and ceremonial rites." (45-47). Being so commanded, Lakshmana asked the monkeys to bring water from the ocean in golden vessels and with that performed the Rakshasa leader's ceremonial bath of installation. Immediately after, Vibheeshana along with Lakshmana, came to Rama with objects of presentation, followed by the citizens of Lanka also carrying presents. They all now made prostrations before Rama the mighty. 48. Seeing Vibheeshana installed king, Rama and Lakshmana were very much pleased and felt satisfied that they had done a duty that they owed to themselves. (49-50). Rama now embraced Sugreeva and said, "O heroic one! With your help, I have been able to be victorious over the mighty Ravana. I have also been able to install Vibheeshana in Lanka."

Sita's Ordeal By Fire (51-85)

(51-52). Then he addressed Hanuman, who was standing by his side in all humility, with the words: "With Vibheeshana's permission, you go to Ravana's palace and inform Sita, the daughter of Janaka, of the destruction of Ravana, and bring to me her reply without delay." 53. At this command of Rama, the intelligent Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, entered into Lanka, welcomed by all the Rakshasas. (54-56). Going to Ravana's palace, he saw underneath the Simsapa tree the sorrow-stricken Sita surrounded by Rakshasa women and always engaged in the contemplation of Rama. In all humility Hanuman made a prostration to Sita. Then with joined palms he stood humbly before her with deep devotion. Seeing him, Sita for a while remained silent. Then old memories came to her. (57-58). She recognised him as Rama's messenger and her face at once brightened up with joy. On seeing Sita calm and collected, Hanuman now began to communicate to her the message he had brought from Rama. (59-60). He said, "O great lady! With the help of Sugreeva and the co-operation of Vibheeshana, Rama along with Lakshmana has crossed over to Lanka with an army of monkeys and destroyed Ravana along with his sons and all his forces. He has after that installed Vibheeshana as the king of Lanka. He has now sent me to you to convey this joyful news."

61. Hearing this gladdening news from her husband, Sita with her voice choked with the feeling of joy, replied, "What shall I give you now for bringing this joyous news? I think there is no jewel or ornament in the whole world that can be a fitting reward for your sweet words." (62-63). At these words of the daughter of Videha, the monkey leader said in reply, "That I am now able to see Rama victorious and established in power is a more precious reward for me than all collection of precious

May Rama be pleased to give permission for that without delay." 66. He agreed to convey this message to Rama and departed making prostrations to her. Reaching Rama's presence, he narrated to him all that Sita wanted to convey through him. 67. He said to Rama, "She for whose sake all these activities were undertaken and this victory won—that sorrow-stricken lady wants to meet you. Be pleased to permit her to do so."

68. When Hanuman said so, Rama, the wisest of men, resolved in his mind to do away with the Maya Sita and bring out the real Sita who was hiding in fire. With this in mind, he said to Vibheeshaṇa: 69. "O king! You now please go and bring Sita. Let her take bath, put on clean clothes and be adorned with all the ornaments. Bring her to my presence quickly." (70-72). Hearing the words of Rama, Vibheeshaṇa along with Hanuman went into the city of Lanka. They got old Rakshasa women to bathe Sita and adorn her with all ornaments. Guarded by attendants wearing turbans and coats and with staffs in hand, handsome Sita was brought in a majestic palanquin. In their eagerness to have a look at her, the monkeys gathered all around. 73. With bodyguards driving away the monkeys on all sides, and amidst the tumult produced thereby, Sita was brought before Rama.

(74-75). Seeing from a distance Sita coming in a palanquin, Rama, the leader of the Raghus, said to Vibheeshana, "Why are you driving away the monkeys? Let them all have a look at Sita just as they see their mothers. So let her come walking to my presence." 76. Hearing these words of Rama, Sita got down from the palanquin and slowly walked towards Rama. 77. Seeing that magical Sita who was created for a definite purpose, Rama addressed her in words that were improper for him to have used. 78. Being unable to bear those words of Rama, Sita said to Lakshmana, "Please make a pyre of fire for me in order that I may infuse confidence in Rama and satisfy the public opinion." (79-80). Lakshmana knew this to be in agreement with Rama's ideas and immediately collected the necessary fuel and made a raging fire. He then stood silently by the side of Rama.

(81-83). Then Sita, with a devoted heart, circumambulated Rama and in the presence of all including, Devas, Rakshasas and women, made salutations to the Devas and holy men, and approaching the fire, said as follows with palms held in salutation: "May the Fire-deity, who is the witness of everything in the world, protect me by showing in a way convincing to all that my heart has never wavered from its allegiance to Rama." 84. With these words, Sita, the embodiment of chastity, circumambulated the fire and fearlessly entered into its raging flames. 85. Seeing Sita enter into the raging fire, the Siddhas and other semi-divine beings exclaimed, expressing their grief, "Alas! How has Rama, an enlightened one, chosen to abandon Sita who is none but his inseparable Consort Sri?"

Chapter 13

DEPARTURE TO AYODHYA

The Hymn of Brahma (1-18)

(1-3). Then there gathered at the place where Rama was, Divinities like Indra, Yama, Varuna, resplendent Kubera, Siva riding on the bull, Brahma the best of enlightened beings, the Munis, Siddhas, Charanas, Pitrīs, Rishis, Sadhyas, Gandharvas, Apsaras and many others. Saluting Rama, the Supreme Being, they said to him: 4. "Thou art the creator of all the worlds. Thou, whose form is made of Pure Consciousness, art the witness of everything. Among the Vasus, Thou art the eighth, and among the Rudras, Thou art Sankara. (5-6). Thou art the real creator of the world. Brahma endowed with four faces, who is ordinarily called the creator, is only a manifestation of Thee and not different from Thee. The Aswini Devas are Thy nostrils and the moon and the sun are Thy eyes. Thou art the origin, the middle and end of the worlds: Thou art the one eternal Being without a second. Thou art ever awake and ever pure. Thou art Pure Consciousness and the source of all that is good and great. 7. To those whose vision is hidden by Thy Maya, Thou appearest as a human being but to those who always remember Thy sacred name, Thou, O Rama, appearest as Pure Consciousness, ever shining. 8. Ravana had deprived us of our status and our prowess. Thou having killed him, we have been restored to our positions."

9. While the Devas were thus speaking, Brahma the father of the worlds, made prostrations to Rama, the embodiment of Truth, and said: 10. "I salute Thee, O Lord, who art all-pervading and the sustaining force behind all, who art meditated upon in their hearts by spiritually awakened ones, who art above the pairs of opposites differentiated as acceptable and rejectable, who art pure Existence and the Dweller in the hearts of all, and who art of the nature of pure witness-consciousness. 11. I salute that Rama with gem-studded crown and with the radiance of the sun, whom undeluded ascetics perceive after having confined the Prana and Apana in their hearts and after cutting asunder with their firm determinative faculty (niscayabuddhi).

12. I salute Rama, who transcends the Maya, who is the consort of Lakshmi, who is the original source of the universe, who was before all other beings, who is immeasurable, who is the dispeller of delusions, who is fit

I salute Rama, who is above the concepts of being and non-being, whose lotus-feet are worshipped by Bhava and other Yogis, who is devoid of worldly attachments, who is indestructible, stainless, sentient, infinite, denoted by the Pranava 'Om'and heroic, and who is a conflagration to destroy the forces of ignorance. 14. Thou art the one who accomplishhest all that I pray for, who transcendest all measurements, who art the consort of Lakshmi, who art the support of everything, who could be approached by Bhakti, who assumest any form in which Thou art conceived, who art the destroyer of Samsara and who abidest in the hearts that are purified by Yoga. 15. I salute Rama who is beautiful like a blue lotus, who is the origin and the end of the whole universe, who is transcendent and beyond the grasp of the means of knowledge available in the world, who is the regulator of all, and who is the one object fit to be worshipped with faith and devotion. 16. I salute Rama, who transcends the bonds of all limits and all measurements, who is the object of worship by Munis, who will delight the Devas in Vrindavana in another incarnation, who is adored by Siva and other deities and who is the source of all joy. No man with attachment for the body can ever know Thee. 17. I salute Rama, who is the object of discourse for all the Vedas and various kinds of Sastras, who is ever blissful, who is objectless awareness, who is eternal, who has assumed a human body for my sake, who is the Lord of Mathura and whose complexion is like that of emerald." 18.

Whoever recites with faith and devotion this unique and knowledge-generating hymn of Brahma addressed to Rama who is blue in complexion, who grants the prayers of all, and who is the Lord of all—that worshipper will be liberated from all sins.

Sita United with Rama (19-22)

(19-20). Pleased with the hymn of Brahma, Lord Agni, the deity of fire, now came out with Sita in his lap—Sita luminous like the light of the sun and dressed in a red cloth and adorned with divine ornaments. Then the Lord Agni, the witness of everything in the universe, said to Rama the redresser of the sorrows of all surrendered ones, as follows: "O Lord of the Raghus! The holy person of Sita whom you deposited in me in the forest, I am now restoring. Please accept her. 21. O Lord Hari! In order to destroy Ravana, Thou didst create a magical Sita. Now Ravana has been destroyed along with all his sons and relatives. The world's burden has thus been relieved. So the double of Sita created by Maya, having fulfilled her function, has disappeared into me." 22. Thereupon Rama, the Consort of Sri, accepted and seated Sita in his lap—Sita who was full of joy, who is inseparable from him, and who is Sri, the generator of all the three worlds.

Hymn of Indra (23-32)

23. Now Indra, the Lord of the Devas, seeing Rama resplendent with glory and united with Sita, came forward in great joy and saluting Rama with joined palms, began to recite a hymn in praise of him in a voice choked with feeling. 24. Indra said: "I always adore Rama, whose complexion is like a blue lotus, who is like a fire to the forest of Samsara, whose blissful form is always adored by Parvati in her heart, who puts an end to the Jiva's involvement in Samsara, and in whom Siva and other deities take refuge. 25. I adore Rama who is the chief redresser of the sorrows of the Devas, who though human in appearance is beyond all forms, who is worthy of praise, who is the transcendent Lord, who is supreme Bliss, who is the worshipful master of all, and who removes the burdens of the world. 26. I adore Ramachandra, who generates joy in the minds of all surrendered ones, who has become propitious, whose name destroys the sorrows of all surrendered ones, who is fit to be contemplated upon by those endowed with austerity and concentration, and who is the friend and ally of the chief of monkeys. 27. I seek shelter in Rama the chief of the Raghus, who is far away for those engrossed in worldly pleasures but near to those who are contemplatives, who is the source of all consciousness and joy, and whose forms give joy to Sita, the daughter of Videha. 28. O Lord! Thou shinest in combination with Thy Yogamaya in a human body assumed for sport. Those whose ears are always hearing accounts of Thy sportive manifestations are filled with spiritual joy in this world. 29. I did not know Thee in the proper light before, inebriated as I was with the pride of being the master of the worlds. Now, out of Thy grace, this pride in the lordship of all the worlds has been destroyed. 30. I adore Rama who is bedecked with gem-studded armlets and with pearl-necklaces, who is like a forest fire to the world's burden of Asuras, who has got the face resembling the autumnal moon, whose eyes are like the petals of a lotus in bloom, and who is beyond the sea of Samsara which is difficult for Jivas to cross.

31. I adore Ramachandra who is blue in complexion like Indraneela gem (Lapis Lazuli) and the blue lotus, who brought peace to the world by the destruction of Viradha and others, who is bedecked with a diadem and other ornaments and who is the cause of joy to Siva. 32. I worship Ramachandra who is seated on a throne more brilliant than a crore of moons, who has got Sita seated in his lap—the golden-complexioned Sita who is brilliant like a flash of lightning—and who is free from all sorrow and weakness."

Events Preceding the Departure to Ayodhya (33-39)

33. After that, Siva in the company of Bhavani appeared in the sky in an aerial vehicle and said to the lotus-eyed Rama:

"I shall come to meet Thee when Thou art received with honour in Ayodhya. Now please look at him, who is the generator of this body of Thine." 35. Then Rama saw Dasaratha before him seated in an aerial vehicle. With great joy and devotion, Rama along with his brother Lakshmana, made prostrations to him. 36. Dasaratha embraced Rama, kissed him on the crown of his head, and said, "O my dear son! On account of you, I have been rescued from the travails of the ocean of Samsara." Saying so, he embraced Rama once again. Rama thereupon worshipped him and Dasaratha disappeared from sight.

37. Rama now said to Indra the king of the Devas, who was standing before him with joined palms, "O thousand eyed one! On my orders please spray a shower of Amrita over these monkeys who have fallen dead on my account, and revive them soon." 38.

Agreeing to do so, Indra sent a shower of Amrita over the dead bodies, whereupon, the monkeys who had died in battle revived as if from sleep. Strong as before, they approached Rama in great joy. But the Rakshasas there did not become alive even by contact with Amrita.

(39-40). Now Vibheeshna made a full prostration to Rama and said, "If Thou art pleased with me, deign to bless me. Be pleased to bathe and be adorned along with Sita, and prepare to start tomorrow along with your brother." (41-42). At these words of Vibheeshana, Rama replied, "My brother Bharata, handsome and devoted, is awaiting my arrival. Dressed in tree-bark clothes and matted locks, he is immersed in meditation on Pranava. Without him there is no bath or decoration for me. 43. Therefore, extend a reception to the monkeys headed by Sugreeva. If you host these monkeys, it is as good as honouring me." 44. When Rama said so, Vibheesha the chief of the Rakshasas, now presented to the monkeys according to their taste, an abundance of gold, gems and clothes. 45. On seeing these leading monkeys treated liberally in this way, Rama thanked them all and permitted them to go to their respective places.

46. After that in the company of Vibheesha, Rama got into the unique aerial vehicle Pushpaka, which was shining like the sun. 47. The bashful Sita was seated in his lap, and his brother, the heroic Lakshmana, by his side. 48. Seated in the aerial vehicle, Rama said to all the monkey and to Sugreeva, Angada and Vibheesha: 49. "Along with all these monkeys you have eminently fulfilled your duty towards a friend and ally. Now permitted by me, you are free to go to your respective places. 50. O Sugreeva! Along with all your generals, you go to Kishkindha soon, And O Vibheesha! You, who are my devotee, go and rule over your country Lanka. 51. None including the Devas headed by Indra can overcome you. Now I desire to go to my father's capital, Ayodhya." 52. All the monkey leaders and the Rakshasa Vibheesha, who were thus thanked and commended by Rama, said to him with joined palms: (53-54) "O Rama, the greatest of the Raghus! We desire to go to Ayodhya and see your coronation and pay our respects to Kausalya. After that we shall go to our countries. O Lord! Be pleased to accord permission for this." 55. Agreeing to this request, Rama said, "O Sugreeva! You along with Vibheesha, Hanuman and the monkeys, get ready to start immediately and ascend Hamsa, Rama, now filled with joy, looked like another Brahma himself. 59. With Rama seated along with Sita and Lakshmana in it, this vehicle of sunlike brilliance originally obtained by Kubera by his Tapas, now shone in the sky all the more.

RAMA'S RETURN JOURNEY TO AYODHYA

Description of Places as seen from above (1-14)

- Now seated in the aerial vehicle, Rama looked all around and said to Sita of moon-like face. 2. "Look at the shining Lanka at the top of the Trikuta mountain and see the battlefield near by, which is miry with the flesh and blood of the dead. (3-4). Here took place the fierce battle between the Asuras and the monkeys. This is the place where Ravana fell at my hand. All the other Rakshasa heroes like Kumbhakarna and Indrajit fell in this place. (5-6). See in the ocean the Setu

(dam) that I constructed. This in future will be famous as the Setubandha in all the worlds—a holy place for people to visit and bathe. By doing so, they will be absolved from their sins. Here I installed Rameswara, the divine image of Siva. 7. It is in this place that Vibheesana with his ministers joined me. What you see there amidst beautiful forests is Sugreeva's city of Kishkindha."

8. As Sita was desirous of seeing the women folk of the monkeys, the aerial vehicle stopped there at Rama's behest, and Sugreeva soon brought Tara and other women for Sita to see. 9. With these women also on board, the Pushpaka aerial vehicle quickly rose into the sky once more. Rama now said again pointing to Rishyamuka mountain, "See, here Vali was killed by me. 10. Now see the famous place Panchavati where I destroyed a large Rakshasa force. Beyond that see the holy Ashramas of Agastya and Suteekshana.

(11-14) O virtuous one! All those ascetics who then inhabited these places are still seen there. There you see the imposing mountain Chitrakuta. It was here that Bharata, the son of Kaikeyi, came to show his regard for me. You now see there Bharadwaja's Ashrama on the banks of Yamuna. And here is Ganga which purifies the whole world. O Sita! What you see there is river Sarayu with numerous sacrificial posts on its banks, and this that you see is Ayodhya. Make salutations to the city."

Hymn of Bharadwaja (15-38)

15. Travelling in this way Rama gradually reached the Ashrama of Bharadwaja on the fifth lunar day after fourteen years of absence. 16. Rama along with Lakshmana saluted the sage Bharadwaja who was seated in the Ashrama and said to him in all humility: 17. "Do you know whether my brother Bharata is getting on well? tion? Are all my mothers alive?" (18-20). Highly pleased to hear Rama's words, Bharadwaja replied, "All are doing well, and as for Bharata, he lives on fruits and roots and wears matted locks and tree-bark clothes. He rules the country dedicating his actions to Thy sandals and is awaiting Thy return. O Lord of the Raghus! By virtue of my Tapas and Thy grace, I have come to know about all Thy achievements in the Dandaka forest, consisting in the destruction of all the Rakshasas, putting forward Sita's abduction as the cause. 21. Thou art verily the Supreme Brahman manifested, so that one could see Thee with the eyes. Thou art without beginning and end. In the beginning, Thou didst bring Water into existence. Thou, the cause of all, didst remain in slumber in the Water. 22. Thou art Narayana because Thou art lying in Nara, water. Thou art Narayana also because Thou art the inner self of Naras or men. The grand-sire of the world, Brahma, originated from Thy navel-lotus. 23. Therefore, Thou art the Lord of the worlds, worshipped by all. Thou art Mahavishnu and Sita the daughter of Janaka, is Lakshmi. This personage, who is known as Lakshmana, is Adisesha. 24. Thou createst this world out of Thyself, in Thyself, by Thy inherent power of Maya. Just like the sky, Thou art not attached or defiled by anything. With Thy power of knowledge, Thou art the witness of everything. 25. Thou art pervading everything within and without. Thou art the Whole. Out of ignorance people see Thee in separation. 26. Thou art the universe. Thou art also the support of the universe. Thou alone art the support of all beings. O Lord! Thou art both the enjoyer and the enjoyed. 27. Whatever is seen, heard or remembered, all that is Thou Thyself. There is nothing else besides Thee. (28-29). For want of true knowledge of Thee, all this is seen in separation. With the dawn of Thy knowledge, nothing is seen in separation. Maya with its products like 'I-sense,' creates this world at Thy will. Therefore, this creation is Thine alone indirectly. 30. In the presence of a loadstone, iron and its products move. In the same way, by Thy look alone this insentient Maya is able to create. 31. In Thy creative and protective aspect, Thou art said to be endowed with two bodies, the Virat or the Cosmic Whole as Thy gross body, and the Sutratma or the subtle Pervading Self known as Hiranyagarbha. 32. Out of Virat Purusha, numerous Incarnations arise and after they fulfill their purpose, they dissolve into the Virat Purusha Himself. 33. O Rama! In this world, whoever recites with attention and devotion the accounts of these Incarnations, they attain to Moksha. 34. O Lord of the Raghus! Being requested by Brahma in days of old to relieve the burdens of the earth, Thou, who wert pleased with his austerities, incarnated Thyself in the line of the Raghus. (35-36). O Rama! Thou hast achieved the purpose of the Devas in fullness. Incarnated as man, Thou hast performed actions impossible for any one to achieve. Famed all the world over for these achievements, the sin-destroying accounts about them will be the cause of the welfare of men both here and hereafter for thousands of years. 37. O Lord of the worlds! Deign to purify my home. Today Thou with Thy forces can take Thy food and stay here. Tomorrow Thou canst proceed to Thy city." 38. Rama agreed to this and stayed in that holy Ashrama for that night. He along with Sita, Lakshmana and the forces received the hospitality of the sage for the night.

Hanuman's Mission to Bharata (39-68)

(39-41). Thinking for a while, Rama called Hanuman, the son of the Wind-god, and said to him, "O Hanuman! You go quickly to Ayodhya and see whether every thing is going on well in the palace. Going to the city of Srингavera, inform my friend Guha that I have come along with Sita and Lakshmana. (42-43). After that you go to Nandigrama. See my brother Bharata and convey to him the news of my welfare as also of my wife and my brother. Inform him also about all that has happened—of the abduction of Sita and the destruction of Ravana. (44-45). Inform him that after destroying all the enemies and the complete fulfilment of my purposes, I am arriving along with my wife, Lakshmana and the leaders of the bears and monkeys. Learn also all the news about Bharata and his doings, and return to me quickly.”

46. Agreeing to do so, Hanuman assumed a human body. Then with the lightning speed of a Garuda attacking a serpent, he quickly proceeded to Nandigrama. 47.

Reaching Srингavera city on the way, Hanuman addressed Guha as follows with a joyous heart: 48. “Your friend, Rama the son of Dasaratha and an embodiment of Dharma, along with Sita and Lakshmana, is abiding in a happy condition. They convey their kind enquiries to you. 49. Permitted by the sage Bharadwaja, Rama will soon arrive at your place and he will meet you.” 50. The resplendent Hanuman said so with great joy indicated by horripilations on his body. Then that mighty one leapt away at great speed.

51. Travelling with high velocity through the sky, Hanuman passed the lake of Parasurama and the river Sarayu and arrived at Nandigrama. (52-55). At Nandigrama, a Krosa (four miles) away from Ayodhya, he saw Bharata. He had put on a small piece of bark-cloth and a skin of black antelope. With his hair matted and dressed in tree-bark cloth, he was subsisting on roots and fruits, and constantly thinking of Rama. With Rama's sandals kept in front as a token of his presence, he was governing the country on Rama's behalf. He was surrounded by ministers and chief citizens, who were all dressed in ochre clothes. Seeing him, who looked like the embodiment of Dharma, Hanuman said with palms joined in salutation: 56. "With a sorrowful heart you are thinking of Rama as living in the Dandaka forest as an ascetic—that Rama is now making enquiries about you. 57. O noble one! I shall now tell you what is very dear to you. Abandon your intense sorrow. Soon would you be able to meet your brother Rama. 58. Having killed Ravana and rescued Sita and thus achieved his purpose, Rama has reached the neighbourhood, along with Sita and Lakshmana."

59. This happy news filled the mind of the mighty Bharata with such intense delight that he swooned and fell on the ground. 60. Reviving soon, Bharata embraced Hanuman who had brought him the joyful news, and literally drenched him with his tears of joy. 61. He said, "You who have come here out of mercy—are you a Deva or a man? I shall grant a boon to you who have brought this joyous news to me. 62. I shall give you as a reward a hundred thousand cows, a hundred villages and sixteen beautiful girls decorated with every kind of ornament." (63-64). Bharata continued, "It's long since my lord Rama has gone to live in the deep regions of the forest. It is only now I am getting some happy news about him. 65. If a man lives for a hundred years, he will in the course of that have some joyous experiences—this common saying seems to have become true with regard to me. 66. How did Rama come to have an alliance with the monkeys? Tell me the truth about it. I shall believe your words." 67. On being thus questioned by high-minded Bharata, Hanuman narrated the incidents of Rama's story one after another. 68. With great joy he heard the narration of Hanuman and then jubilantly called Satrughna and said:

Bharata goes to meet Rama (69-100)

69. "O scion of Raghu's line! Let worship and offerings of every kind be done in every temple in the city without an exception. 70. Let a large group consisting of panegyrists, bards, musicians and dancing girls proceed immediately. 71. Let the royal ladies, ministers, the Brahmanas, the leading citizens and the tributary princes proceed to see the moon-like face of Rama." (72-75) Hearing Bharata's words, Satrughna ordered the city to be decorated with pearls and jewels, with bunting, flags and with all other kinds of decorations. Houses were decorated by people who were experts in that art. All who were eager to see Rama now started in a body. That group consisted of a hundred thousand horses, a thousand elephants and ten thousand chariots with golden decorations. The people following were all carrying objects fit for presentation to royalty. 76. Following this group were the royal ladies in palanquins. 77. Bharata walked on foot along with Satrughna, himself carrying the sandals of

78. At a distance he saw the aerial vehicle Pushpaka, built by Brahma by an act of will, shining like the sun and the moon. 79. Now Hanuman said, "In that Pushpaka, you will see the heroic Rama and Lakshmana along with Sita as also Sugreeva, the king of the monkeys and Vibheeshana with his ministers." 80. Then the sky was filled with the joyous exclamations of that concourse of men and women, young and old: "O here is our Rama! O here is our Rama!" (81-82). Those who were riding in chariots or on the backs of elephants and horses got down and walked. They saw Rama seated in the Pushpaka Vimana just like the moon in the sky. In great joy they all saluted him with joined palms. 83. Next the joyous Bharata made prostrations to Rama seated in the Vimana just like the sun on the mountain Meru. 84. Now, commanded by Rama, the aerial vehicle touched the earth. Bharata along with his brother Satrughna entered into it with great joy and made prostrations once again. 85. Rama who was meeting his brother Bharata after a long time, seated him in his lap and embraced him in great joy. 86. Next Bharata approached Lakshmana and Sita, and announcing his presence by name, saluted them. 87. Bharata then embraced Sugreeva, Jambavan, the heir apparent Angada, Mainda, Dvivida, Neela, Rishabha, Sushena; Nala, Gavaksha, Gandhamadana, Sarabha and Panasa. 88. All these monkeys, being capable of taking any form, assumed the appearance of men and received Bharata.

Versed in good conduct, they made enquiries about Bharata's welfare in great joy. (89-92). Then Bharata said respectfully addressing Sugreeva, after embracing him, "With your help, Rama has been victorious and has destroyed Ravana. So, you, O Sugreeva, are a fifth brother to us four." Now in all humility, Satrughna made prostrations to Rama and Lakshmana and after that to Sita also. Then Rama went to his mother who had become lean and pale on account of sorrow. Producing great joy in her mind, he saluted her, touching her feet. (93-95). Rama then saluted his other mothers Kaikeyi and Sumitra. Bharata now put on Rama's feet that pair of sandels of his, which he had been worshipping with great devotion till now. He said, "The kingdom that you entrusted to me, I am now restoring to you herewith. O Lord! I have attained the highest fulfilment of my life in seeing you return to Ayodhya. My aspirations have been fulfilled. 96. The granary, the army, the treasury, and other limbs of the State that you had entrusted to me have, by your grace, now grown tenfold. Now, O Lord, govern your kingdom." 97. Hearing these words of Bharata, all the monkey leaders shed tears and in great joy praised Bharata. 98. Then Rama in a mood of great joy seated Bharata in his lap and proceeded to Bharata's Ashrama in that aerial vehicle. 99. Then Rama got down to the ground from that aerial vehicle and addressed it thus, "Now I give you permission to go. You can be at the service of Kubera, the son of Visravas and the lord of wealth."

RAMA'S CORONATION

Rama's entry into Ayodhya (1-29)

1. Next Bharata, the son of Kaikeyi, spoke to his brother with great devotion joining his palms in salutation. 2. He said, "O Rama! My mother Kaikeyi did a wrong to you. You bestowed the kingdom on me. In the same way I am giving it back to you." 3. With these words, Bharata made a full prostration to Rama and along with his mother Kaikeyi, requested Rama many times to accept the kingdom. 4. Rama, who was the Lord of all but followed all the ways of man, agreed to the proposal and received back the kingdom. (5-7). To him, the Supreme Soul and the Lord of all, who is ever immersed in His inherent Bliss-consciousness, whose Bliss transcends every other forms of joy—to Him, the Lord of all, of what account is the attainment of the worldly kingdom? He, by the movement of whose brows, all the three worlds get destroyed, He by whose blessing all the glory and wealth up to that of Indra are obtained, He who out of sport creates this world—for that Lord of Rama,

 8. Still in order to fulfil the aspirations of all those who worship Him, he has assumed this human form and has been following all these human ways.

9. Next, at the order of Satrughna, skilled barbers came and attended on Rama. All the ingredients for the coronation were also gathered. (10-11). After the removal of their hairs, Bharata, the high-souled Lakshmana, Sugreeva the king of the monkeys, and the Rakshasa Vibheeshana had their baths. Next with his matted locks shaven off, Rama finished his bath, and decorated with beautiful garlands and anointed with fragrant unguents and dressed in costly robes, stood there resplendent. (12-13). The high-souled Bharata himself attended to the decoration of Rama and

Lakshmana. 14. The royal women dressed and adorned the beautiful Sita. The good-natured and affectionate Kausalya attended in great joy to the decoration of the wives of the monkeys. 15. By this time according to the orders of Satrughna, Sumantra had got ready a chariot shining like the sun. (16-17). Rama devoted to Truth and Dharma now sat in that chariot. Sugreeva, Angada, Hanuman, Vibheeshana and others, after bath and decoration with ornaments and costly dress, preceded and followed Rama in chariots and on the backs of horses and elephants. Sita and the wives of Sugreeva followed in palanquins. 18. Just as Indra travels in his chariot to which are yoked green-coloured horses, Rama now travelled to the great city in his chariot. 19. Then at a certain stage of the procession, majestic Bharata officiated as the charioteer, Satrughna held the white royal umbrella with golden handle and Lakshmana held the peacock-feathered fans. 20. Standing nearby, Sugreeva waved the white chauri fan while Vibheeshana held another in his hand. 21. In the sky was heard the sweet sound of praises the Devas, Siddhas and holy Rishis were singing in honour of Rama. (22-23). The monkeys in human form rode on elephants to the accompaniment of sounds of kettledrums, conchs, Mridanga, Panava and Anaka. Rama, the eldest of Raghu's line, now entered the beautifully decorated city of Ayodhya. 24. The citizens rejoiced to see the arrival of Rama, who was of blue-complexion like a blade of Durva grass, who was decorated with an imposing diadem and jewels, and who had lotus-like eyes tinged slightly red. 25. The citizens saw Rama, who wore a yellow cloth held in position by a golden belt studded with charming gems, and the interspace between whose powerful arms was adorned with priceless pearl necklaces. 26. The citizens saw Rama, who was attended upon by famous and serene monkey leaders like Sugreeva, who was resplendent like the sun, on whose body was applied sandal paste mixed with Kasturi, and who was adorned with a garland made with the flowers of the Kalpaka tree. 27. On hearing about Rama's arrival, the womenfolk, with their faces bright with enthusiasm, abandoned all their household work and took their positions, having decorated themselves well, on the high terraces of houses.

28. Producing great delight in the mind, they drank, as it were, with their eyes the form of Hari, which was a delight for the eyes to see. With smiling and bright faces, they showered flowers on him. 29. Rama, who was none but the Supreme Hari, moved like another Brahma Himself, and with a smiling face cast his benevolent glances on his subjects. Moving forward with unhurried steps he entered the well-decorated palace of his father, which resembled the very abode of Indra.

Coronation of Rama (30-45)

30. Moving into the inner apartments of the palace, the lordly Rama made prostrations at the feet of his mother with great delight. Then he made prostrations also to the other wives of his father. (31-32). Then Rama, noted for his righteousness, addressing Bharata said, "Provide for the residence of my friend Sugreeva, the king of the monkeys, my great palace furnished with all luxuries. Next provide houses for the comfortable stay of all the others." 33. On being so instructed, Bharata did accordingly. Bharata of majestic countenance said to Sugreeva: 34. "For the ceremonial coronation-bath of Rama, please despatch some fast messengers to fetch water from all the four oceans." (35-36). Sugreeva thereupon despatched Jambavan, Hanuman, Angada and Sushena on this errand. They travelled fast like wind and soon brought water from the oceans in golden pots. 37. Satrughna along with the ministers, took the water thus brought to the royal priest Vasishtha. (38-39). Then the aged and devoted Vasishtha along with the other Brahmanas seated Rama on a golden pedestal studded with gems. The ceremonial bath was administered by a group of sages consisting of Vasishtha, Vamadeva, Jabali, Gautama and Valmiki. (40-41). They bathed Rama of Raghu's line, as the Vasus bathed Indra, with water fragrant with Tulasi, Kusa grass and flower essences and the juice of various kinds of herbs, while there stood in attendance Rishis, sacrificial priests, highminded Brahmanas, the ministers and virgins. From the sky above, the Devas and the Deities of the quarters and their attendants sang his praises and witnessed the ceremonial bath. 42. Satrughna held over him the white royal umbrella, while Sugreeva and Vibheeshana held the Chowri fans in hands. (43-45). Prompted by Indra, the Wind-god presented a necklace of gold, while Indra himself came in person and presented to Rama, with great devotion, another necklace studded with all kinds of gems and golden embellishments. The Gandharvas sang and groups of Apsaras danced. The kettle-drums of Devas then sounded and showers of flowers poured down from the sky.

(46-50). There sat Rama, who was blue in complexion like fresh Durva grass, who had eyes large like lotus petals, who was adorned with a crown brilliant like a crore of suns, whose beauty excelled that of a crore of Cupids, who was dressed in yellow silk, decorated with divine ornaments and anointed with highly fragrant unguents, who was resplendent like a thousand suns, who was two-armed, and on whose left side was seated Sita of golden complexion and lotus-like arms and adorned with all ornaments. She was on his left lap, held by his left arm. Seeing this form of Rama more resplendent than anything else, Siva along with Uma and all

Hymn of Siva (51-63)

51. Mahadeva said, "Salutation to Thee, the luminous Being in the company of Thy Sakti, who art handsome like a blue lotus, who art bedecked with a diadem, necklaces and armlets, and who art seated on a throne. 52. O Lord of the worlds! Thou art the one Unitary Being without a beginning, middle and end. With Thy Maya, Thou dost create, protect and destroy this universe. But being ever immersed in Thy inherent Bliss, Thou art not affected by any of these actions. 53. Assuming the Gunas of Prakriti, Thou, for the blessing of devotees who have taken shelter in Thee, manifestest as many incarnations among Devas, men and the like, and thus sportest in this world. Only the knowing ones ever understand this. 54. Thou createst the whole of this universe through Brahma, who is only a part of Thyself. At the base of the universe, Thou bearest it in the form of Adisesha. Thou manifestest in this universe above and below in many forms as the sun, wind, moon, vegetation and clouds. 55.

In the bodies of embodied beings, Thou art present as digestive fire, and manifesting in five forms, Thou digestest all things eaten. Thus dost Thou support this world.

56. O Lord! Out of Thy prowess alone have come out all energies—energies manifest in the moon, sun and fire, the vitality in all living beings, as also the strength, courage and longevity found in them. 57.

O Lord! The Logicians speak of Thee in different ways as Brahma, Siva and Vishnu, and as Time, Karma, moon, sun etc. But this diversity posed by Logicians has no substance in it, as there is no existence other than Thee, the one Supreme Brahman. 58. In the Vedas and in the Puranas, Thou, the only Existence, art spoken of as incarnating as fish, etc .In the same way, all that is considered cause and effect art Thyself. There is nothing separate from Thee. 59. In this infinitely diverse creation, whatever existed before, whatever would exist hereafter and whatever exists now — all these moving and unmoving beings have no existence apart from Thee. Thou art therefore the transcendent Being. 60. Because of Thy Maya, people do not understand Thy real nature. Only those whose minds have been purified by the service of Thy devotees, understand the supreme truth about Thee as the unitary Existence. 61. As their minds are outwardgoing, all beings from Brahma down, do not understand Thy Supreme spiritual nature as the Truth of the Atman. So wise persons worship Thee in this form with devotion, and freed from all sorrow, attain to liberation. 62. O Rama! I

Hymns of Indra and Others (64-75)

64. Indra said, “On the strength of the boons given by Brahma, the Lord of the Rakshasas deprived me of all the glorious enjoyments of the realm of the Devas. O Lord! By Thy grace, all that has been restored to me after the destruction of that evil enemy of a Rakshasa.”

65. The Devas said: “O Vishnu, the destroyer of Mura! The evil-minded Ravana had deprived us of our share of sacrificial offerings made by twice-born ones. He has now been destroyed by Thee. By Thy grace, we shall have our share of sacrificial offerings as before.”

66. The Pitris said: “O great one! By Thy grace, this cruel Rakshasa has been destroyed. He had, by his power, deprived us of the rice-offerings which men used to give us at Gaya and other places. Now we are in a position to get them again.”

67. The Yakshas said: “This Rakshasa used by his power to engage us always in servile work, making us carry him. O Lord of the Raghus! By the destruction of this Ravana, thou hast liberated us from innumerable woes arising from servile work.”

(68-69). Gandharvas said: "We who are versed in music, used to sing accounts of Thee and thereby get immersed in a sea of Bliss and live self-satisfied. Afterwards, this evil-minded Ravana deprived us of our status and making us his servants forced us to sing his praise. (70-72). We who were in that condition have been saved by Thee from the oppression of that evil-minded Rakshasa." Thus the great serpents, Siddhas, Kinnaras, Maruts, Vasus, Rishis, Gavas, Guhyakas, the celestial birds, Prajapatis, Apsaras and all other heavenly beings approached Rama, feasted their eyes on his form, praised him individually and were in turn honoured by him. (73-74) All of them, including Brahma and Rudra, then returned to their respective stations, praising Rama in great joy, singing about his achievements, and meditating in their hearts on him seated on the throne with Sita and accompanied by Lakshmana.

75. Amidst the sounds of celestial musical instruments and showers of flowers from the sky and the chanting of hymns by the Devas and Munis, Rama, of blue complexion, with a smiling face, and accompanied by Sita, Lakshmana, Hanuman and the monkeys, shone with the brilliance of a crore of suns.

Chapter 16

CONCLUSION OF RAMAYANA

Leave-taking of All Allies (1-23)

1. When Rama, the giver of joy to all the worlds, was crowned, the earth began to abound in vegetation and fruit-bearing trees. (2-3). At the time of Rama's coronation, flowers that are not generally fragrant began to emit sweet smell. Rama first presented innumerable bulls, horses and cows to holy men. Afterwards he also gave them huge quantities of gold, clothes and jewels. (4-5). He presented to the devoted Sugreeva a necklace of gems brilliant like the sun. To Angada he presented two armlets of superior make. 6. Then he presented Sita with a necklace of pearls and gems having the brilliance of a crore of moons. 7. Sita took the necklace from her neck, and holding it in her hand, looked repeatedly at all the monkeys, and at her husband to know his mind. 8. Rama, understanding what was in Sita's mind, looked at her and said, "O Sita! You can present it to whomever you are pleased to give." 9. In the presence of all, she presented that necklace to Hanuman, who stood there resplendent with that necklace on his neck and with his imposing countenance.

10. Seeing Hanuman standing by with palms joined in great devotion, Rama said with great joy: 11. "O Hanuman! I am extremely pleased with you. You ask from me what you desire. I shall grant you that, be it something that is difficult even for Devas to obtain." (12-13). With a heart elated with joy, Hanuman saluted Rama and replied, "O Rama! I am never satisfied with repeating Thy name. Therefore, I wish to remain always on this earth repeating Thy name. May this body of mine remain so long as Thy name is remembered in this world. O great King! This is the boon that I desire." 14. Rama replied, "Liberated you will remain in this world till the end of the Kalpa. At the time of the world's dissolution, you will attain to oneness with Me. There is no doubt about it."

15. Now Sita said to him, "By my blessing all enjoyable things of life will follow you wherever you are." 16. Blessed in this way by those divine beings, Hanuman joyously saluted both of them again and again, and reluctantly left their presence for the region of the Himalayas for performing austerities.

17. Next Rama turned to Guha who was standing there saluting with joined palms and said, "O friend! You now go to the beautiful city of Srингavera. 18. Always think of me. Enjoy the fruits of the Karmas of your past. In the end, you will attain to the salvation of Sarupya (of being like me)." 19. With these words, Rama presented him with superior ornaments, extensive kingdom, and knowledge of the spiritual truth. Then, embraced by Rama, Guha went to his kingdom with a joyous mind.

20. Next Rama made presentations of rare ornaments and clothes to all the leading monkeys who had accompanied him to Ayodhya. (21-22). Now all the visitors, including Sugreeva and Vibheeshana, after being thus honoured by the Supreme Being Rama, returned to their respective places in great joy. Sugreeva went to Kishkindha. 23. And as for Vibheeshana, after receiving all honours from Rama, he returned to rule over the kingdom of Lanka, which was now free from all enemies.

Rama's Rule (24-30)

24. Rama, who was the object of everyone's love, now ruled the kingdom, and Lakshmana, though he never desired it, was installed as the heir apparent. He continued to serve Rama devotedly. (25-26) Rama in reality is the Supreme Being, the witness of all activities, free from all blemishes, devoid of agency and similar limitations, ever unchanging, and always immersed in his inherent Bliss. Still having taken up a human form and the role of a teacher, he performed innumerable Yagas including Aswamedha, in which he distributed an enormous quantity of wealth as Dakshina. 27. During Rama's rule, women were never widowed and had not to mourn for that reason. There was no fear from serpents nor from diseases. 28. The world never suffered from the depredations of thieves and no disaster overtook the people. There was never the unfortunate situation of old men surviving, while the young and the children died. All were devoted to the thought and worship of Rama. 29. The clouds rained in season and according to necessity. The subjects were all devoted to Dharma and to the rules and regulations of Varna and Ashrama. 30. Rama looked upon his subjects as his own children and they considered him as their father. They were all devoted to Dharma. In this way Rama ruled over the country for ten thousand years.

Greatness of Ramayana (431-45)

31. It was Siva who gave out this holy and esoteric text, which is called Adhyatma Ramayana (spiritual version of Ramayana), the study of which bestows prosperity, long life and health. 32. Whoever studies or hears this with a mind steady, devoted and spiritually elevated, will attain to all objects that he has got in his mind and will be free from his numerous sins. 33. Whoever hears or studies this Ramayana from the beginning to the coronation of Rama, will attain to great wealth if he desires wealth, gain a virtuous son approved by noble-minded persons if he be one seeking an issue. 34. If a king hears this Ramayana, he will attain great wealth, extensive land and kingdom, freedom from all sorrows and victory over all his enemies. 35. This Adhyatma Ramayana can be heard also by women who want to have long-lived sons and gain the respect of all. A woman considered barren will bear an excellent son, if she hears it with devotion. 36. Whoever studies this with faith and is free from anger and jealousy, will overcome all difficulties. With devotion for Rama in his heart, he will be free from fears and blessed with all happiness. 37. All Devas will be pleased if a man hears this Adhyatma Ramayana from the beginning. He will overcome every obstruction in his way. He will attain to great prosperity. 38. A woman who after her period hears this Rama-yana from the beginning with devotion, will give birth to a noble and longlived son, and she will gain the respect of all the world 39. Whoever worships the text of Adhyatma Ramayana (along with the study of it) and makes prostrations to it, will be free from all sins and will attain to the supreme Status of Vishnu. 40. Rama's gracious blessings will be on one, who either himself reads or hears read the whole of this Ramayana with a heart full of devotion. 41. When Rama, the Supreme Being, the soul of all, is pleased with a person, he attains to whatever he wishes of the four ends of life—Dharma, Artha, Kama and Moksha. 42. To hear this Ramayana regularly without break, practising austerities, will be conducive to longevity, health
